

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lorraine Powell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Ralopowell

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lorraine Powell

Cuyahoga Falls, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ronald Norman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to morman489

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ronald Norman

Miami, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Yaklich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mfy

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Yaklich

Pittsburgh, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paul Albert to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to got-art

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Paul Albert

Freedom, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rita Greenberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rrag23

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rita Greenberg

Ipswich, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joseph Toia to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bugler 10

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joseph Toia

Boynton Beach, FL33426, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Renee Carlson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Sweetrubi

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Renee Carlson

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Shauna Sparlin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to shauna.k.sparlin

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Shauna Sparlin

Wichita, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donna Boland to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to donna.boland

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's inaction!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Do your job to protect our democracy from plutocrats!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Donna Boland

Mission, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Gaieck to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to William.gaik

10/22/2015 01:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Gaieck

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joan E Penzenstadler to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jpenz38

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joan E Penzenstadler

Auatin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Weaver to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to weaver.bert

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Weaver

Chamblee, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathryn Douville to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to villek 161

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathryn Douville

San Antonio, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Maureen Peterson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to moepeterson 1

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Maureen Peterson

South Pasadena, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mads Bjerre to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Mads

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mads Bjerre

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donald Jones to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to don.jones.olw

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donald Jones

Los Alamos, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alejandro Furrer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to alef

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alejandro Furrer

South Lake Tahoe, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rich Conklin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Blugras5

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rich Conklin

Fort Myers, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jim Messina to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to prairiewings

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jim Messina

Cedar Rapids, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paisley Davidson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hotpants 2000

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Paisley Davidson

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark Chapman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mchapman

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

WE ARE TIRED OF ELECTED AND APPOINTED OFFICIALS WHO ARE JUST TOOLS OF THE KOCHS AND OTHER RICH POLITICAL DONORS. GET SOME INTEGRITY, WILL YOU?!?!?

Mark Chapman

Ann Arbor, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Andrew Yuen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Bgyuen

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Andrew Yuen

MOUNT POCONO, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
boris arbunic to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jarbunic

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

boris arbunic

santa rosa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Langan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tjdlangan

10/22/2015 01:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Langan

Atlanta, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Troy Sanders to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Troy

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Troy Sanders

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Chris & Melanie Abele to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to chris

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Chris & Melanie Abele

Newton, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ilona Steur-Smith to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to isteursmith

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ilona Steur-Smith

Louisville, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Aaron Frick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to aaronplaysguitar

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Aaron Frick

Grand Junction, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ted Fishman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ted10000

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ted Fishman

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joan-Claire Veriditas to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jc.veriditas

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joan-Claire Veriditas

Stephentown, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Hunter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jhunter151

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Hunter

Penn Yan, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Celia O'Kelley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to celiaand

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Celia O'Kelley

tuscaloosa, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steve Pratt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Pratt.s

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Steve Pratt

Buffalo Grove, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynne Teplin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lynnet

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lynne Teplin

Bronxville, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Ellison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ellison2

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Ellison

Redondo Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Frances Bell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to francesbell 1945

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Frances Bell

Bishopville, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Bramble to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to judib7012

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Judith Bramble

Ferndale, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Theresa Thornburg to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tlc4uctc

10/22/2015 01:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Theresa Thornburg

Elkview, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jay Nelson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jay

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

Do your job and defend the Constitution, not make it easier for corruption to flourish.

If money is free speech, then every penny spent should be accounted for, and the donors known.

And not allowing YOUR OWN COMMISSIONERS any say? You show that your conservatism is a joke.

I pray for your souls, because you will eventually have to answer at a higher court than one that can be bought and paid for.

Jay Nelson

Albuquerque, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Colin Melville to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cfmelville

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Colin Melville

South Lake Tahoe, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ron Galen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rongalen

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ron Galen

Richmond, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Anna mock to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to annaboo48

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Anna mock

new orleans, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Luke Metzger to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to metzgerluke2

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Luke Metzger

Wichita, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04

marcia flannery to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marciaflannery

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

marcia flannery

oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ellen Madsen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edmadsen

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ellen Madsen

Olympia, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
DARRELL SMITH to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dasmith416

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

DARRELL SMITH

MIAMI, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janet Schmidt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to janetschmidt3

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janet Schmidt

Eugene, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Clark Davis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to clarksart

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Clark Davis

Los Osos, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

billy Snyder to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to okiboki.billy

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

billy Snyder

pensacola, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Frank Schoeman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to fschoem44

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Frank Schoeman

SOMERS, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
donna diller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donnadiller77

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

donna diller

onaway michigan, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Billy Howard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to BFHOW

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Billy Howard

OWASSO, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith McElwain to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tjnce

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judith McElwain

Huntington, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
monica falkin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Mpf511

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

monica falkin

Montville, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Vokac to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jwvokac

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Vokac

Willow Springs, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
suzanne zuniga to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to suzanne

10/22/2015 01:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

suzanne zuniga

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
sandy hall to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to peanut4

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

sandy hall

ogden, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Wood to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mjkw31

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mary Wood

San Luis Obispo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nora McBee to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to naughtybruja

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nora McBee

Concord, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Eric Reed to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kunzang401

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Eric Reed

Fort Bragg, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ms.Marion Gregg-Whited to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to marionquits

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ms.Marion Gregg-Whited

Teaneck, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael Butler to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to michael.butler

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Butler

Clayton, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Charles falk to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bigheft

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Charles falk

LONG BEACH, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ken Ward to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vette 1979z

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ken Ward

Hyde Park, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lawrence Allen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Larryaln.la

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lawrence Allen

Mill Creek, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gary Heymann to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gmheyman

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gary Heymann

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jewel Payne to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jewel

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jewel Payne

Davis, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Paulett Simunich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pspysanky

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Paulett Simunich

Johnstown, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Keith Baldwin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kbzray

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Keith Baldwin

Ashland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Eleanor Curland to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eleanorcurland

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Eleanor Curland

Englewood, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donna Williams to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donnaewilliams

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donna Williams

Columbus, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mike Kelly to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kelly.michaelr530

10/22/2015 01:43 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mike Kelly

Jersey City, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Richard Zimmermann to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dickzim

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard Zimmermann

Avon, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Samuel Todd to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to boleytodd

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Samuel Todd

Mint Hill, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sophia Bicoy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sophiabicoy

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sophia Bicoy

San Antonio, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Todd Gukelberger to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to toddguk

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Todd Gukelberger

Fairfield, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Winnie Gallagher to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to winniegall

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Winnie Gallagher

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gerald Eastman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gerryeastman 2477

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gerald Eastman

Auburn, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Schmidt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pop61243

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James Schmidt

New Port Richey, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Katherine Holmes to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to cookieblondie

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Katherine Holmes

Ann Arbor, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Martha Novak to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to novakc.m

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Martha Novak

Albuquerque, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Rae Ann Gustafson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to raeanng

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rae Ann Gustafson

Mill Valley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lyle Bachman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to docboc44

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lyle Bachman

Marina del Rey, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michele Temple to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mt1142

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michele Temple

Woodside, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marc Dumas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to skylinep

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marc Dumas

Fairbanks, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
JoAnn Mariano to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tootsmariano

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

JoAnn Mariano

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edith Covington to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edithcovington

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Edith Covington

Decatur, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Aprille Evans-Wright to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to alwrightbiz

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Aprille Evans-Wright

Riverbank, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Amy Soloway to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ssoloway

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Amy Soloway

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark McLaughlin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marcusarmando

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mark McLaughlin

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bob Meer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Rwm993

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bob Meer

Lexington, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Bruce Christopher to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bruce

10/22/2015 01:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bruce Christopher

HOFFMAN ESTATES, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jonathan Harris to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jdharis862

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

It is time to restore the election process to sane reality. The voters have an absolute right to know who is trying to influence the process. If big donors don't want to be identified, they are probably supporting shady and dishonest groups that will turn consumers against their business interests if known. Too bad. Stand by your beliefs or suffer the consequences for your extreme political views.

Jonathan Harris

Hampden ME, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Greg Singer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gregsinger

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Greg Singer

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
thomas klusaritz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tomklu3

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

thomas klusaritz

allentown, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Martha Tack to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Marthatackmt 4

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Martha Tack

Wetumpka, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joanna Taylor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jotaylr

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joanna Taylor

Buffalo, WY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
robert staszak to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bstaszak

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

robert staszak

Elk Grove Village, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wilfred Robin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wilrobin

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Wilfred Robin

Hickory, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
lynn robinson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to suburbanlynn

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

lynn robinson

bellevue, NE

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Gore to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rgore

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Gore

Maryland Heights, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Roger Baston to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rogerbaston

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Roger Baston

Whitefield, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Shippee to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rsoxbob

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Shippee

Richmond, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ronn Hochstedler to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ronnhoch

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ronn Hochstedler

Overland Park,, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marsha Elston to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mar2cats

10/22/2015 01:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marsha Elston

Tarpon Springs, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elizabeth Evelyn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to e2skp4788

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Evelyn

Cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Brent Racker Jr to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to blueocean 117

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Brent Racker Jr

Kaysville, UT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Emily Van Evera to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to emily.van_evera

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Emily Van Evera

Duluth, MN, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Donna Davis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to djd 15

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donna Davis

NORMAN, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
JC Rotunda to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jrcrare

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

JC Rotunda

Charlottesville, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeff Mende to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmende

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeff Mende

Howell, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
john crombie to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to riverbrother 1

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

john crombie

lanesville, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Weems to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jimweems06

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Weems

Avondale Estates, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

margaret younng to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to myoung94564

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

Our elections should be transparent, with the public kept informed about which groups are funding ballot measures and funding political flyers. The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections. Please DO THE RIGHT THING, FEC, and end undisclosed election spending.

margaret younng

pinole, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Boyce to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to summer68

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Boyce

Myrtle Creek, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Boyce to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to summer68

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Boyce

Myrtle Creek, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joseph Baumhauer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Joebaumhauer

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joseph Baumhauer

Upper Black Eddy, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dylan Wood to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dylnwood

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dylan Wood

Arlington, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jane Meyer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jameyer

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jane Meyer

Alexandria, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Russ Beebe to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to winehiker

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Russ Beebe

Sunnyvale, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sheri Lemon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sprescott

10/22/2015 01:46 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sheri Lemon

Herndon, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mike Rockas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rockaspm

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mike Rockas

Harrodsburg, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nathan Carroll to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nathan.michael.carroll

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nathan Carroll

Minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Vicki Picou to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vicki .picou

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Vicki Picou

Baton Rouge, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Herman Rodrigo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to herman23

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The FEC has the responsibility to enforce US election laws and ensure that elections are conducted in a fair and open manner. As such, the public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence our votes.

The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC needs to restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence our votes. The FEC also needs to close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence our elections.

I urge the FEC to take immediate and appropriate action before the 2016 election cycle gets in full swing. We have the right to know!

Herman Rodrigo

Conway, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Ary to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to quadventissoftware

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Ary

Reno, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Iris Keltz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to iris.keltz

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Iris Keltz

Abq., NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Iraida Capaccio to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eusebiam

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Iraida Capaccio

Sudbury, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ricki Disdier to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rickid23

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ricki Disdier

Minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Julie Gallegos to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Julie!

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

Give me a break.

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Julie Gallegos

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robert Paulson Carol Herndon to: IndependentSpending

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

Please respond to rpaulson

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Paulson Carol Herndon

Tampa, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Hans Weiffenbach to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to hans.beky

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Hans Weiffenbach

Carlisle, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kris Lacy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to krism818

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kris Lacy

Tampa, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cindy Parrone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cparrone

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cindy Parrone

Murphysboro, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Lange to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pdlange

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Lange

Warren, VT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
barbara zaron to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nysomce

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

barbara zaron

slingerlands, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jesse Duncan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Jessemcduncan

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jesse Duncan

FEDERAL WAY, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Katherine Hokins to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to katrinathegreat

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Katherine Hokins

Rancho Mirage, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ruth Weedman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ruthleew

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ruth Weedman

Longview, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Terry Corbin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to terry

10/22/2015 01:47 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Terry Corbin

Maple Grove, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steven Wiese to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to steve

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Steven Wiese

Minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jim Petkiewicz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to peckos

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jim Petkiewicz

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Peggy Salas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to oha 122050

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Peggy Salas

Grand Junction, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Lehew to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to stephenlehe

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stephen Lehew

New York City, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cynthia L Seidel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cindi.seidel

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Cynthia L Seidel

Centennial, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Raul Aristy to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to raristy 1

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Raul Aristy

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Meta Neilson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Meta .neilson

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Meta Neilson

Bryn Mawr, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jon Emery to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to emerysongs

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jon Emery

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Rosemary Hykes to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to rosey54hl.hykes

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rosemary Hykes

Akron, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joseph Sibree to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jsibree

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joseph Sibree

Rancho Cucamonga, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Brad Meloche to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bradmelo385

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Brad Meloche

Clearwater, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jade Coyote to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jade.r.coyote

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jade Coyote

Mount Shasta, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Owen Snoey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to oksnoey

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Owen Snoey

Vancouver, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Philip Sharp garcia to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Pksharpgarcia

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Philip Sharp garcia

El centro, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Patricia Rosenblad to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to patrarose

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

I think most of us have a high enough consciousness to realize that putting profit and big money requests before true democracy is wrong. We will have to live with what we create and it will end up hurting those who worship big money as much as it will the others. Please follow your highest and best and you will never regret it.

Patricia Rosenblad

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Margaret T.M. Petkiewicz to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to margarita.p830

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Margaret T.M. Petkiewicz

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Scott Steinman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to drsteinman

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Scott Steinman

Bradenton, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
mary calvert to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to katiecalvert 10

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

mary calvert

Henderson, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Russell Green to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to greenruss

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Russell Green

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bonnie Milrod to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bonniemilrod

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bonnie Milrod

Santa Cruz, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Daniel Baker to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to vagabondentertainment

10/22/2015 01:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Daniel Baker

Poulsbo, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Ellingson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jellingson

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Ellingson

Aurora, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Herod to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmherod

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Herod

Saint Clair Shores, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
judy Zielinski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jzielinski

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

judy Zielinski

berne, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Grivna to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to griv410

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Grivna

St Louis, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Morgan Smith to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to morgan.shelah.smith

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Morgan Smith

Trumansburg, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tom Grenier to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tomu

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tom Grenier

Niagara Falls, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gary Thaler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 4gary4thaler4

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gary Thaler

Revere, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sue DiCara to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sdbookgal

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

I find this situation especially disturbing! The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sue DiCara

El Paso, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sherman Whittaker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to shermanwhittaker

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sherman Whittaker

Chesapeake, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Miriam Green to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mgreenchicago

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Miriam Green

CHICAGO, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan Journet to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to alanjournet

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan Journet

Jacksonville, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steve Birge to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sbirge11

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Steve Birge

Bothell, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bobby Locke to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Block67

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bobby Locke

Richmond, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lloyd Matthes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lmatthes47

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lloyd Matthes

Gladstone, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

William Howald to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wnhowald

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Howald

Marysville, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Idrees Khan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ilkhan7861

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Idrees Khan

Macungie, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Fithian to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to fithian.ra

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Fithian

Normandy Park, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Don Sparks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donsparks

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Don Sparks

Northridge, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Doug Morrison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tuulen

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Doug Morrison

Ashford, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

madeleine ndjagmon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to madotndjagmon

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

madeleine ndjagmon

lowell, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nannette Gover to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to NannetteGover

10/22/2015 01:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nannette Gover

Winston-Salem, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Witt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to david-witt

10/22/2015 01:50 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Witt

Kansas City, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Reed Oliver to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bjo-ih

10/22/2015 01:50 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Reed Oliver

Cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Randy Schwartz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ranzen92

10/22/2015 01:50 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Randy Schwartz

Fair Lawn, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Matt Groner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to matt.d.groner

10/22/2015 01:50 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Matt Groner

University City, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jordan Lewis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jordan

10/22/2015 01:50 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jordan Lewis

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elliot Koontz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to koontz.elliot

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elliot Koontz

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tracy Pease to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cassiopia 26

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tracy Pease

Rockford, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Helen Jones to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to shej

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Helen Jones

Ashland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Diane Lizard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dlizard.lizard

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Diane Lizard

Indianapolis, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Emily Van Alyne to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to oceanminded09

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Emily Van Alyne

West Richland, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kelly Allison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kma36

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kelly Allison

berlin, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Milton Steinberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to msteinberg

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Milton Steinberg

Peekskill, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jo Ann McGreevy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joann.mcgreevy

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jo Ann McGreevy

North Bergen, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Daniel Holibaugh to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to danh.matrix

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Daniel Holibaugh

Alliance, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Loren Stoner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Irsdc

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Loren Stoner

Grand Marais, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
martina hainke to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tinatae11

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

martina hainke

cleveland heights, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Geoff Drumm to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to geoffdrumm

10/22/2015 01:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Geoff Drumm

Chino valley, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Patricia Schermerhorn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to patscher

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Schermerhorn

Edgewater, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joan Szechtman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to u2nohoo

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joan Szechtman

Cheshire, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Barrington to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jeb2020

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Barrington

CHESTER, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Brenda Peppers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bpeppers 1

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Brenda Peppers

Goldsboro, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
robert nelson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rgnelson

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

robert nelson

Spokane Valley, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Geri Kromminga to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gkromminga

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Geri Kromminga

Vancouver, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Apryl Johnson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to arj5665

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

To the average person this looks like you're accepting bribes. We, The People, The Tax Paying Citizens have the right to know who is influencing you, and how much.

Are you really going to tell us that it's none of our business? OR That this is nothing but idle curiosity? Please do not insult us, just answer our questions.

Thank You

Apryl Johnson

Cookeville, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
steven nielsen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to thelittleguy

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

steven nielsen

port jefferson station, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marjorie Weiss to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to msw

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Marjorie Weiss

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kathleen Lowney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to splat

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathleen Lowney

Issaquah, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Larry Sherman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eaglesct

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Larry Sherman

Edmond, OK, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark Cappetta to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Mark

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Cappetta

Rancho Mirage, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Laurie Kuntz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to laurie_kuntz

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Laurie Kuntz

Boise, ID

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bruce Faurot to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brucefaurot

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

FEC commissioners Ann Ravel and Ellen Weintraub wanted to spur the gridlocked agency into action, so they took the unprecedented step of formally petitioning their own agency. But their petition was REJECTED by right-wing commissioners who claimed that, for the purposes of the formal petitioning process, corporations are people, but FEC commissioners are not.

Commissioner Weintraub was understandably astounded by the Republican commissioners' denial of her personhood. "I cannot believe that you are actually going to take the position that I am not a person," she said during the hearing when the dispute erupted. "A corporation is a person, but I'm not a person?" (Read coverage of the incident in the Washington Post.)

The impasse threatened to prevent the formal petition from being filed. Commissioner Weintraub looked at Public Citizen lobbyist and money in politics expert Craig Holman who was sitting in the audience at the FEC hearing, and asked: "Would someone from the public be willing to file the petition?" Holman and Public Citizen signed the Ravel/Weintraub petition and filed it within the hour. The petition for rulemaking is now open for public comment. Use the form on the left to submit your comment today.

DEAR REPUBLICAN FEC COMMISSIONERS:

Please post my comment publicly:

FUCK YOU! OBEY THE CONSTITUTION, DO YOUR JOB, OR RESIGN... "TODAY IS A GOOD DAY FOR THE GOP TO DIE!"

Sincerely but never yours, Bruce Faurot

Bruce Faurot

Santa Rosa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Pat Ferrara to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to PatFerrara 1

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pat Ferrara

Shaker Heights, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judy k Nelson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ojaicat33

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judy k Nelson

Ojai, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
TJ Brooks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tjbrooks2300

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

TJ Brooks

Eureka Springs, AR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
jeff Farrell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jfarrell429

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

jeff Farrell

west park, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
A Sparks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to atsparks_au

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

A Sparks

Castro Valley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Laurence George to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to larryg

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Laurence George

Nicasio, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Valerie Dare to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Vgoogooo

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Valerie Dare

Rockaway Park, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Daniel Sirks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to danspc

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Daniel Sirks

Mesa, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gregg Mack to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to greggmack

10/22/2015 01:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Gregg Mack

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kathleen Pearson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kapearson.lp5

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathleen Pearson

Anchorage, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
myrna britton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mbritton

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

myrna britton

Santa Cruz, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Leslie Cozad to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to leslie.Coza

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Leslie Cozad

Cotati, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Margolis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to davemargolis

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Margolis

Buffalo Grove, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Andrew Olsen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to andrewolsen 76

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Andrew Olsen

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Evangeline Chinn to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to vanchinn

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Evangeline Chinn

Paradise, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathryn DeBra to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to artbykd

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Given the hundreds of billions of dollars that are now flowing into our elections, full transparency of all sources for all candidates is required in order for voters to make a truly informed decision.

Isn't this what the FEC is all about? Monitoring our election process to make sure all citizens have full and fair access to voting and all related information to it. People vote, not corporations.

Kathryn DeBra

Sun Valley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Erin Stark to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to erinstark

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Erin Stark

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Scott Graham to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to graham5969

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Scott Graham

Union Grove, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Stibolt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to stibolt

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Stibolt

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Hans Pickel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hanspick

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Hans Pickel

Mabank, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Welch to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to obscuredjinn

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Welch

El Paso, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dean Stevens to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dean

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dean Stevens

Brookline, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Mineck to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to skiite

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stephen Mineck

Vinton, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jill Borden to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jillbordenaz

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jill Borden

St. Ignatius, MT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Fay to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jhfay

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Fay

Wheaton, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steve Ritchie to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sritchie077

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Steve Ritchie

Northborough, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Molly Noland to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to manodaland

10/22/2015 01:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Molly Noland

Penrose, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Debra Mullikin-Kilpatrick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mullikin

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Debra Mullikin-Kilpatrick

Chestnut Hill, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
remi clignet to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to remi.clignet

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

remi clignet

Nanterre, france, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ed Haggard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edhaggard

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ed Haggard

Whites Creek, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gregory Walsh to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gaw910

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Gregory Walsh

Milton, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rick Priebe to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rlpriebe28

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rick Priebe

Pinehurst, ID

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jarron Paronto to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jaronjello

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jarron Paronto

Kansas City, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Douglas Godfrey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to douglasgodfrey

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Douglas Godfrey

Georgetown, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janet Walls to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jwalls 1239

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janet Walls

Minden, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathleen O'Nan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to LPLA

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathleen O'Nan

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ahrash Bissell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ahrash.bissell

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ahrash Bissell

Berkeley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Duane Brownell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to duanebrn

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Duane Brownell

Brandon, MS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Okum to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to michael.okum

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Okum

Glendale, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Frantz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Wfrantz

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Frantz

Neptune, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marilyn Riedman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 52international

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marilyn Riedman

McMinnville, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Caffery to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to scaffery 1633

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Caffery

Jeffersonville, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Kelley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to josephinebasin

10/22/2015 01:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Kelley

Meeker, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Amber VanBeber to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to amber.vanbeber

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Amber VanBeber

Kansas City, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Don Wilkins to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donbob77

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Don Wilkins

Mount Vernon, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Trent Buckman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to drrhino

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Trent Buckman

Carlsbad, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jim Carlstedt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jim.carlstedt

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jim Carlstedt

Santa Monica, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Charles Wagner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Wagnerfordtudor

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Charles Wagner

Portsmouth, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lolly Brown to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brololly

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lolly Brown

Chula Vista, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Daniel Reschke to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dreschke27

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Daniel Reschke

Peoria, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ted Hoffman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hoffyt

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ted Hoffman

Fort Jones, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kristen DeVille to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to silvericey

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kristen DeVille

Covington, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pasolati

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Miller

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Laurent Hourcle to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to breakwater04072

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Laurent Hourcle

Saco, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Taylor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Tttaylor

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Taylor

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Karen Lopez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to karen.lopez.phd

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Karen Lopez

Fayetteville, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ctjohnmiller

10/22/2015 01:55 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Miller

New Haven, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Katherine Goss to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kathy_goss

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Katherine Goss

Riverdale, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
SHARYN BARTHES to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to squirrelcity35

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

SHARYN BARTHES

NAPA, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jeremy Williams to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to thanatose

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeremy Williams

Maple Valley, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kirk Gaw to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kirk.oneone77

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kirk Gaw

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alex Wesson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to risecabin

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Alex Wesson

Durango, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Cheryl Bourguignon to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to cheryl.bourguignon

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Cheryl Bourguignon

Missoula, MT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark Reback to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mark

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Reback

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Deb Vanderpoel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Debevanderpoel

10/22/2015 01:56 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Deb Vanderpoel

Chicopee, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wendy Wittl to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wjwittl

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Wendy Wittl

Santa Barbara, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Richard Crawford to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to poly914

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Richard Crawford

Phoenix, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

christopher boothby to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to nnpfmr

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

christopher boothby

portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Donald Inman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donaldinman

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donald Inman

Flushing, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Phyllis White to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to flyingcoyote

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Phyllis White

Yorktown, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robin Kirschenbaum to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Robin.kirschenbaum

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robin Kirschenbaum

Shaker Hts., OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carlton Russell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to carlanc60

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carlton Russell

Anchorage, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Steinberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dasteinberg

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Steinberg

NY, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lee Bowen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lee250

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lee Bowen

Gurley, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Linda Ghelfi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to linda.ghelfi

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Ghelfi

Washington, DC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nicolas Haralambides to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to nicolas44h

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nicolas Haralambides

Piedmont, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Calvin Brandenburg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Cbrandyc1

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Calvin Brandenburg

Brownsburg, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kevin Vaught to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to klvaught

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kevin Vaught

Antioch, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dennis Starr to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dennisstarr

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dennis Starr

Carlock, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Eileen McCorry to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mccorrye

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Eileen McCorry

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

MICHAEL DIGREGORIO to: IndependentSpending

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

Please respond to mdiggs

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

MICHAEL DIGREGORIO

GERMANTOWN HILLS, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
B Quinn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bquinn67

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

B Quinn

Roselle, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
KIM BOYINK to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kim5335

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

KIM BOYINK

Mesa, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Rhodes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to drhodes

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Rhodes

Tempe, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
JaNahne McCready to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to padelford 79

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

JaNahne McCready

Coon Rapids, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Janet Hedgepath to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to gr8tefully

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janet Hedgepath

Auburn, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Von Peacock to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vepeacock

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Von Peacock

Laredo, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Shelli Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to shellibelli

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Shelli Miller

Las Vegas, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sharon Al-Haddad to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to salhaddad5

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sharon Al-Haddad

Clarkston, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robert Applebaum to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bobnroz

10/22/2015 01:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

The Supreme Court had no objection to full disclosure, despite their unfortunate decision on "Citizens United".

Robert Applebaum

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynne Chase to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lynne.chase

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lynne Chase

Sandpoint, ID

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Andrea Gillespie to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to celticdreamer00

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Andrea Gillespie

Jonesboro, AR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tabb Jensen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Tabbnwendy

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tabb Jensen

Dayton, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ken Rose to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to krose

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ken Rose

Port Orchard, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Shirley Chandl to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to schandl823

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Shirley Chandl

Sun City Center, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joan Sadler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joansadler

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joan Sadler

Belvedere, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tiffany Snyder to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tiffany.ashley.snyder

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tiffany Snyder

Boulder, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Tinsley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tinsleyrc

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Tinsley

Iowa City, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Amy Fried to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Amyfried

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

I thought that our government was supposed to be for the people and by the people - not for the corporations, by the corporations. What part of this am I misinterpreting?

Amy Fried

Freehold, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Richard Reuther to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to upstage

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

We want clean, fair elections. We want you to do the job that is expected of you for the people of the country, not the corporations. We expect to run the Commission for the benefit of the PEOPLE of the nation, not the corporations. If you cannot or will not do your job, we expect that you will resign and let someone else who will do the job be appointed.

Richard Reuther

Richard Reuther

PASCO, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joyannah Lonnes to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to joyannah

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joyannah Lonnes

Santa Rosa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joanne Van Hook to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to joanne

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joanne Van Hook

Palmdale, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dave Johnson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tarnson

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dave Johnson

Watertown, SD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Margaret Lirones to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to margaret.lirones

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Margaret Lirones

Corcoran, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Harold Martini to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hdale.martini

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Harold Martini

Las Vegas, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04

A Vlahodimitropoulos to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to a.vlahodimitropoulos

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

A Vlahodimitropoulos

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Peteer Paget to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pagetpe

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Peteer Paget

Ellensburg, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Peggy Drake to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to peggycd

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Peggy Drake

Steuben, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Melissa Marshall to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marshalmelissa

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

"Of the people, by the people and for the people" should be our government's foundation. Financial influence should be limited and fully disclosed.

Melissa Marshall

Lakeland, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jennifer Schaffer to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mariposa.jennifer

10/22/2015 01:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jennifer Schaffer

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael Gilbert to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gilbert_m

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Gilbert

Woodstock, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kristina Jacobs to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kacobs

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kristina Jacobs

Woburn, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Benton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to susanbenton 6

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Benton

Scottsdale, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Max Obuszewski to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mobuszewski

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Max Obuszewski

Baltimore, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark Emmett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to emmettmark

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mark Emmett

Schererville, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bruce Hopkins to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bruce

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bruce Hopkins

Vallejo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Larry and Deborah McFatter to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dlmcfatter

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Larry and Deborah McFatter

Redlands, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Bob Zimmerman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bobzim 1934

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bob Zimmerman

Tahoe City, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Guy Briggs to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mguybriggs

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Guy Briggs

Bowling Green, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kae Bender to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kae Bender

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

As a real Person and a citizen and a voter, I am outraged that the FEC is refusing to consider the petition of its own (also real People) Commissioners. I totally agree that we need more transparency and less corporate domination in the election funding process.

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kae Bender

Lancaster, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gerald Johnson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ghjohnson50

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gerald Johnson

Germantown, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kyle Breneman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tomeconqueror

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kyle Breneman

Baltimore, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Greenberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sgberg

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stephen Greenberg

Nevada City, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

James Julien to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to james.julien1

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Julien

Issaquah, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Paulos to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jypaulos

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Judith Paulos

Arlington, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan Frank to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to alanfrank

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan Frank

Beaufort, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marie Venner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marie

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The American people need your help. Your role is so important, and it is critical for you to do your job for the American people. Please restore the FECs common sense disclosure rules. The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marie Venner

Lakewood, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
CM Chandler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to colette.chandler

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

CM Chandler

Grandview, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edgar Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edgarwmiller

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Edgar Miller

Los Altos, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Wilson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Susan.ste.marie

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Wilson

Alpharetta, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Daoust to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to r_daoust

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Daoust

Huntington, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nicole Lehr to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lehr.nicole.e

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nicole Lehr

White Lake, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
charles wensman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to charlewensman

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

charles wensman

minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Grish to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to m.grish

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Grish

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan Saichek to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to absaichek

10/22/2015 01:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan Saichek

Fremont, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
pj malone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pjmalone

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

pj malone

conyers, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Monica Gillespie to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to monicagem

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Monica Gillespie

Northridge, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael A. Johnston to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Pluto_Of_The_Underworld

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael A. Johnston

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael MacDonald to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mikem1tank

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael MacDonald

Chandler, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ken Klaas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to zk650

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ken Klaas

Washougal, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark Edgren to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edgren50

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Edgren

Fairfield, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Anthony Lowry to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Tony.Lowry

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Anthony Lowry

Logan, UT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

John McMahon to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jdcmah

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John McMahon

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tonya Phillips to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tphillip

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tonya Phillips

Sacramento, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nathan Harling to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nate.spamhead+dailykos

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections. Thank you for your consideration.

Nathan Harling

Redwood City, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alexander Shaw to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Alexandersha

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alexander Shaw

Bethesda, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Hugh McElwain to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hsmcelwain

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC ought to enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Hugh McElwain

N Chesterfield, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marco Fierro to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mfierro

10/22/2015 02:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marco Fierro

McLean, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alexander Legault to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to legaultalex80

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alexander Legault

New Orleans, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edward Cutler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edwardcutler

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Edward Cutler

Tampa, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Davis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mmdavis

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mary Davis

Monroe, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Peter Shoun to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to petershoun

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Peter Shoun

Niles, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Tansey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jrtansey

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Tansey

Albuquerque, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Debra Banes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to redbanes

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Debra Banes

Sacramento, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Clara B. Edmond to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to cbee1949

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Clara B. Edmond

Bronx, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Conni McGraw Morris to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to conni.l.mcmorris

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Conni McGraw Morris

St. Albans, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Sandra Woodworth to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to sandraworth

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sandra Woodworth

North Hampton, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Little to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jkl 1

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judith Little

Arcata, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ann Hubbard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ahbassoon

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ann Hubbard

Lucerne, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Anita Williams to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to willmsab

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Anita Williams

Beloit, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James McGowen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to carouselfarm

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James McGowen

Kearneysville, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paula Frighetti to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to willow5

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Shame on you!

Paula Frighetti

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Bridges to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jfbbridges 1

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Bridges

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Samiyyah New to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Samiyyah 82

10/22/2015 02:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Samiyyah New

Yukon, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Frances Blair to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to fblair39

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Frances Blair

Steilacoom, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Charles Retherford to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to retherford

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Charles Retherford

Muncie, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Norm Horstman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nhorstman

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Norm Horstman

Springfield, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Maura Kroh to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to oatiekroh

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Maura Kroh

Lakewood, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Baker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to merlyncorp

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes.

The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is due to weak FEC disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous disclosure rules

The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs, and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Baker

The Village of Indian Hill, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jonathan Blanton to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to coreyblanton

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jonathan Blanton

Lexington, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rojelio Delgado to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rmdelgado65

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rojelio Delgado

Saint Peters, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Stephen Halpern to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to shalpern

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stephen Halpern

Cherry Hill, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeffrey Lander to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to JeffLander

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jeffrey Lander

Westfield, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Molly Plunkett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to plunkettma

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Molly Plunkett

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Terrence J Hanley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to thanley833

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Terrence J Hanley

Las Vegas, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Lowitt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Richard.Lowitt

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard Lowitt

Concord, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Frank Driscoll to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to shamptn 1

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Frank Driscoll

Meridian, ID

RE: Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lee Bowen to: IndependentSpending@fec.gov

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

I do not wish to withdraw my comments. You may post the comments and my name on your web site.

Thank

D. Lee Bowen

Life is not a journey to the grave with the intention of arriving safely in a pretty and well preserved body, rather to skid in broadside, thoroughly used up, totally worn out, and loudly proclaiming, "WOW.... WHAT A RIDE!!!!!"

"We are all born ignorant, but one must work hard to remain stupid."
—Ben Franklin

"Two things are infinite. The universe and human stupidity.
.....and I'm not sure about the universe."
Albert Einstein

Subject: Re: Comment re: REG 2015-04
From: IndependentSpending@fec.gov
To: lee250@hotmail.com
Date: Thu, 22 Oct 2015 13:57:17 -0400

The Federal Election Commission has received your email comment on REG 2015-04 (Independent Spending by Corporations, Labor Organizations, Foreign Nationals, and Certain Political Committees).

Please note that your email, including any attachments, will be posted on the Commission's website and made available in the Commission's Public Records room. If you would like to withdraw your comment because it includes information that you do not wish to make public, please contact Ms. Amy Rothstein or Ms. Esther Gyory in the Office of the General Counsel at (202) 694-1526 or (202) 694-1650 within three business days of this email.

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paula Young to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ppppy

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Paula Young

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gene Donahue to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to genesj1

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gene Donahue

Oshkosh, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joseph Barreca to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Joe.Barreca

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joseph Barreca

Kettle Falls, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Brad Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brad

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Brad Miller

Floyd, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Murphy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rick2

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Richard Murphy

Richardson, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nathan Roll to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to metropoliscycles

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nathan Roll

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Alexander Filichev to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to a.filichev.09

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alexander Filichev

Hercules, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Rosenblum to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pol 1

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stephen Rosenblum

Palo Alto, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tom Houghtby to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hoboy

10/22/2015 02:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tom Houghtby

Lathrup Village, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lois Tague to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 2ltague

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lois Tague

Dayton, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kirk Leonard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kirkleon

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kirk Leonard

Salem, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Melinda Gale to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mainebooks

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Melinda Gale

Brunswick, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Constance Albert to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to cealbert

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Constance Albert

Green Bay, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Diana Saxon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to moondaughter72

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Diana Saxon

Salem, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Molly Engellenner to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mollokitty

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Molly Engellenner

Applegate, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Thomas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmichaelthomas 2005

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Thomas

Chapel Hill, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Elizabeth Acevedo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lizacevedo52

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Acevedo

Sun Valley, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
jeffrey margulies to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmar8265

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

jeffrey margulies

roslindale, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lilvia Soto to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lilviasoto

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lilvia Soto

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Minda Thorward to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to minda.t.edwards

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Minda Thorward

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeanne Steelman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mooks.steelman

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeanne Steelman

Fuquay Varina, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Iris Keltz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to iris.keltz

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Iris Keltz

Abq., NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Beverly Cole to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to colebev

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Beverly Cole

Boulder, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edward Reinhard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to oktyabr

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Edward Reinhard

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Amy Rivera to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to amy.rivera23

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Amy Rivera

Encinitas, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Margee Stone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to margeestone

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Margee Stone

Newburgh, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elizabeth Werner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bethwerner

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Elizabeth Werner

Hamden, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Margee Stone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to margeestone

10/22/2015 02:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Margee Stone

Newburgh, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

E. Thomas Costello to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to etcostello

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

E. Thomas Costello

Naples, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Montalvo-Moramarco to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mrsmnstr

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Montalvo-Moramarco

Poway, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Loubov Mintas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mintaslv

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Loubov Mintas

Greensburg, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Caroline Ramsay Merriam to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ramsaymerriamfund

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Caroline Ramsay Merriam

Washington, DC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Valerie McCarty to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Valmcc7

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Valerie McCarty

Miami, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
samia zaman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to munchow

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

samia zaman

NEW YORK, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Borta to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mgborta

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Borta

Arlington Hts, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Irvin Pfab to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to irvinpfab

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Irvin Pfab

Iowa City, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Barbara Brigham to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to barbamms

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Brigham

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Richard Valencia to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to platy01

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard Valencia

Pasadena, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Amalia Benson Bodkin to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to amaliathree

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Amalia Benson Bodkin

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gary Reed to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gary.k.reed

10/22/2015 02:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gary Reed

Grand Blanc, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Linda Look to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to l.look

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Look

Houston, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Rush to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to br

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Rush

Whitesboro, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cheryl Pohl to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pohl.cheryl

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Cheryl Pohl

Kendall Park, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Hickman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tomehtny

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Hickman

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jared Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jtmiller346

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jared Miller

Urbana, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janice Gipson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to janmyjoe3

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janice Gipson

Falls City, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marsha StLouis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mastlouis

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Marsha StLouis

Kent, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ken Morton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kpmorton

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Your refusal to count Ravel and Weintraub as citizens/individuals while allowing corporations to count as individuals is another indication of how bad things are in Washington. This kind of stuff is why the public is revolting against Washington insiders!

Ken Morton

Jefferson City, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Larry Skupien to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to skup4646

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Larry Skupien

Oregon, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Erik Lane to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to eriklane

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Erik Lane

Vancouver, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gene Ray to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to generay

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gene Ray

Arab, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edmund Skowronski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edronski

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Edmund Skowronski

Stroudsburg, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Denise DeBelle to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ddebelle

10/22/2015 02:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Denise DeBelle

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Meryle A. Korn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to meryle.korn

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Meryle A. Korn

Bellingham, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Dolloff to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to micaljdoll

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Dolloff

Northwood, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Hoats to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jhoats

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Hoats

Alpharetta, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathleen Blank to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kblank

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathleen Blank

Park City, UT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joanne Watchie to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jwatchie

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joanne Watchie

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Barbara Chidester to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to BSCATS

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Chidester

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tim Phelps to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tphelps

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tim Phelps

Allenspark, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patsy Cantrell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Cantrellhps

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patsy Cantrell

Munising, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Yvonne Zola to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sparrow

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Yvonne Zola

Tallahassee, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ed & Pat Lee to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edpatlee

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ed & Pat Lee

Boca Raton, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Holm to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to barbaraholm36

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Holm

Villas, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Al Lindsey, M.D. to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to alind88

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Al Lindsey, M.D.

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pam Denman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to spam 1954

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pam Denman

Topeka, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carroll Baylson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cwbaylson

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carroll Baylson

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Anne Marchin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to annemarchin22

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Anne Marchin

Manhattan, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ed Maling to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to n7mlr

10/22/2015 02:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ed Maling

San Marcos, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Darien Simon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to darien.simon1

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The system is broken. It is long past time to fix it. The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Darien Simon

Ellsworth, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan Arnold to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Alanaarnold

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan Arnold

Hamilton, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michelle Yates to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to myates67

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michelle Yates

Cary, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Myrna Doering to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mdoering3

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Myrna Doering

Jamestown, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pamela Brinley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pam

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pamela Brinley

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ann Sextro to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cedarfieldshires

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ann Sextro

Sequim, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Baldwin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to patrb33

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Baldwin

Wilmington, DE

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joseph Ralston to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to info

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joseph Ralston

Colorado Springs, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janet Barstow to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to janbarstow38

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janet Barstow

Decatur, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Roger Sundberg to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to rssecteck

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Roger Sundberg

Long Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
rick frigo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ib2mad

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

rick frigo

fond du lack, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
J Lasahn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jacqueline

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

J Lasahn

El Cerrito, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lloyd Downs to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lloydmdowns

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lloyd Downs

Magalia, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Craig Leonard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Cpatrick.leonard

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Craig Leonard

Randolph, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donald Meyerson Sr to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dmeyerson

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donald Meyerson Sr

Easton, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steve Overton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to steveo2857

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Steve Overton

Leicester, UK, ot

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Whipple to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to winter_hill

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Judith Whipple

Somerville, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Zagaris to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to z_man

10/22/2015 02:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Zagaris

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gretchen Elliott to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cellopower6

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Gretchen Elliott

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marilyn Schambach to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to m.scham70

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Marilyn Schambach

Afton, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joyce Bryk to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donjoy

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joyce Bryk

Ros. Hts, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Peter Boone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pete.sull.boone

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Peter Boone

Novato, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
R Wells to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tigerwells

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

R Wells

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Hayes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to john

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Hayes

Chattanooga, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Matthew Johnson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mejohnsn

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Matthew Johnson

San Carlos, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Syd Rumford to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to syd2588

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Syd Rumford

Long Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Virginia Sweeny to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to virginia .sweeny

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Virginia Sweeny

Minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Waser to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to carol

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carol Waser

Washington, DC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Melvin Bautista to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to morenci62

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Melvin Bautista

Phoenix, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
steve abrams to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to steven.abrams

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

steve abrams

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ole Nielson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to skyviking5

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ole Nielson

Abbotsford, BC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Guild to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sue.guild

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Guild

Sherman Oaks, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Angela Esslinger to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to angieesslinger

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Angela Esslinger

Wichita, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Constance Spinney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cspinney5965

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Constance Spinney

Largo, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Wiesner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jcwiesner

10/22/2015 02:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Wiesner

Castro Valley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dorothy Wilkinson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to deegee43

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dorothy Wilkinson

Hollywood, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Catherine Galligan to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Cathy.sweetpea

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Catherine Galligan

Stamford, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joseph Glackin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jeglackin

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joseph Glackin

Holyoke, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jonathan Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmilt7

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jonathan Miller

Waukegan, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

James Stephens to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jkis

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James Stephens

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Wingeier to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to swing 1027

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Stephen Wingeier

Atlanta, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nick Papworth to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Papworth

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nick Papworth

Johnson City, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Laura Kaminski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lkam8560

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Laura Kaminski

Mesa, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Lee to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to susan

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Lee

Waltham, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Philip Alvarado to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Zamboniman 50

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Philip Alvarado

Lynn, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Johanna Cummings to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jhcummings

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Johanna Cummings

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Karen Glasser to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kglasser250

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Karen Glasser

Encino, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tom Koester to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tkoe

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tom Koester

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dwight Hutchison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dhdhutch04

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dwight Hutchison

Jamaica Plain, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeff Tunkel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jwtunkel

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeff Tunkel

Mount Airy, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael Halloran to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mshalloran2605

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Halloran

Salem, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Greg Goodman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hokudai24

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Greg Goodman

Granville, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

yolanda mitchell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ymitch83

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

Corporations are people, but FEC commissioners are not? What is wrong with our country?

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

yolanda mitchell

tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Jiorle -Nagy to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Linda.jiorlenagy

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Linda Jiorle -Nagy

Sharon, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sylvia Forte to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to fortes

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sylvia Forte

Bel Aire, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cynthia McFall to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cynthiamcfall

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cynthia McFall

Allen, UT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stan Kauffman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jskauff

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stan Kauffman

Pellston, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Max Fleischauer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mfleischauer

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Max Fleischauer

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
D. Udelson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to udelsond

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

D. Udelson

Cooper City, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joyce Greenberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joyce

10/22/2015 02:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joyce Greenberg

Highmount, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Melvin Taylor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to melvin-taylor

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Melvin Taylor

Sacramento, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Dahlstrom to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ddahlstrom

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The FEC needs a new Chairman-one that can tell REAL people from CORPORATIONS!! IMP{EACH THIS FEC CHAIRMAN FOR BIAS & FAILURE TO ABIDE BY THE FEC MISSION STATEMENT and BY-LAWS to ASSURE FAIR & EQUAL ELECTIONS IN THE US.

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Dahlstrom

Issaquah, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Annie Brock to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to peace 1313

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Annie Brock

Laramie, WY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Sue Stromberg to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to suestromberg

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sue Stromberg

Mentor, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Glory Arroyos to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to garroyos

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Glory Arroyos

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ana Holub to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to anaholub 1

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ana Holub

Mount Shasta, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Barbara Sabol to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to barbara.sabol

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Sabol

Naples, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michelle Huizar to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to amhuizar

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michelle Huizar

Pomona, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dan Gerhard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to revdanger

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dan Gerhard

Mount Vernon, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Miriam Woods to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to miriam.j.woods

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Miriam Woods

Bloomington, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Heleen de Boer - van Dijke to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to edeboer

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Heleen de Boer - van Dijke

Middelburg, ot

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Heleen de Boer - van Dijke to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to edeboer

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Heleen de Boer - van Dijke

Middelburg, ot

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gregory Penniston to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to gpenniston

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gregory Penniston

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Hezekiah Johnson III to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hezekiahjohnsoniii

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Hezekiah Johnson III

Albany, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
ellen zarter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ellenzarter

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

ellen zarter

Bellevue, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Kuentzel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Jdk82951

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Kuentzel

Plainsboro, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Benjamin Burde to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Ben

10/22/2015 02:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Benjamin Burde

Irvine, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barry Werber to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to b.bravowhisk

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barry Werber

Pittsburgh, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Samuel Newman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to samuelnewman 12

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Samuel Newman

Columbia, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jim Fowler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jlfowler

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jim Fowler

Sale Creek, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
mila hillgrove to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to milahill63

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

mila hillgrove

North port, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Richards to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to davidrichards 1

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Richards

East Berlin, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ricardo Hofer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hofer52

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ricardo Hofer

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
val hammel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to valham

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

val hammel

Berkeley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lisa Misemer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to greenlite.synergy

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lisa Misemer

Belfair, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Todd McKenney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tmckenney203

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Todd McKenney

GrapeView, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carole Malsin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Tenderacres

10/22/2015 02:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carole Malsin

NY, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jane Yardley Russo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to janerusso47

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jane Yardley Russo

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Daniel Selfridge to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to selfridgedaniel

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Daniel Selfridge

ridgefield, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
George Muller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to burpingbedpost

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

George Muller

S. Berwick, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dan Aurian-Blajeni to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ezra.three

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dan Aurian-Blajeni

Bellingham, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chris Hensley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to beachlv2265

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Chris Hensley

Valley Center, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Margaret Denison to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to denisonm

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Margaret Denison

Corvallis, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Nakata to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to james_nakata_52

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James Nakata

Citrus Heights, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Doten to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sddoten

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Doten

PHOENIX, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Laurin Raiken to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Ir2

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Laurin Raiken

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Doten to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sddoten

10/22/2015 02:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Doten

PHOENIX, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dennis Arvanitis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to science 13

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dennis Arvanitis

New Albany, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marc Leon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mleon11

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marc Leon

Beaverton, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Neil Standish to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nstandish

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Neil Standish

Woodbury, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paulette Bliss to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to paulettebliss

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Paulette Bliss

Saint Louis, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nina Sprecher to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sprecher.nina

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nina Sprecher

Berkeley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jesse Coppenbarger to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jocoppen

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jesse Coppenbarger

Jackson, MS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Erica Hiersteiner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to effierst

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Erica Hiersteiner

Chestnut Hill, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Jakson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to David.w.jackson.jr

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Jakson

Everett, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alex Hirtle to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to alexhirtle

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alex Hirtle

Riverdale Park, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
b geiser to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bgeiser

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

My response is prompted by a watch-dog organization. I've devoted much attention to this and related items over the years. There is much I could say that should be changed regarding the FEC itself. That said, I comprehend that this regards a specific aspect under the purview of the FEC. I think it is important that the FEC start representing the people of the federation of states. I'll leave the following and state that I agree with it.

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

b geiser

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Wiles III to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jwiles3rd

10/22/2015 02:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Wiles III

Durham, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Victoria Bower to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vbower1984

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Victoria Bower

Puyallup, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Shawn Tripet to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to shawn

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Shawn Tripet

Spring Park, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Paul Davenport to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to psdavenport

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Paul Davenport

Jacksonville, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lawrence Landherr to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to IJI71504

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lawrence Landherr

Schroeder, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Gorman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to gormantd

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Gorman

santa fe, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04

George Milkowski to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to gmilkowski

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

George Milkowski

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Davey Mitchell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to daveywm

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Davey Mitchell

Lancaster, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Holdridge to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to DAVEHOLDRIDGE

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Holdridge

Fair Haven, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thel Ferguson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to justatestinhere

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

Without an informed public, a truly representative democracy cannot continue to exist. We should be allowed to see which corporations and wealthy groups or individuals are sponsoring the campaign ads that attempt to influence our votes.

Artificial legal constructs are NOT people! Those who run and/or invest in corporations already have exactly the same individual rights, responsibilities and opportunities as the rest of us, and they should not be granted more power than all other citizens of the United States of America.

Representatives can only effectively serve one master, and democracy and plutocracy cannot coexist within the same space. They are mutually exclusive. The latter views We The People as no more than necessary sacrifices upon the Altar of the Almighty Buck. That is the exact opposite of all that our great nation was intended to become.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis warned us years ago: "We can either have democracy in this country or we can have great wealth concentrated in the hands of a few, but we can't have both."

The FEC's current, weakened disclosure rules, even when properly enforced, have resulted in a near-total lack of public information on campaign spending.

The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence our votes.

The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and which allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thel Ferguson

Muncie, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ross Kevlin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to grandmasterflashy

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ross Kevlin

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Charleen Steeves to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Charadr

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Charleen Steeves

Topanga, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robert and Dolores Scheelen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to scheelen

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert and Dolores Scheelen

Medford, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Rose to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brose 12

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Rose

Fremont, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
judith tuck to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jt_tuck

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

judith tuck

tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

elizabeth koopman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jasperbeach

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

elizabeth koopman

cockeysville, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lorna Isenberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to LBIsenberg

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lorna Isenberg

Mercer Island, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steven Weigner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ulc

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Steven Weigner

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Karen Quail to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to karenquail

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Karen Quail

Davis, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
paula lynn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hollywood 5459

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

paula lynn

bala cynwyd, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Irene Gurley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to njg

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Irene Gurley

Gardnerville, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Peterson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cornytunes

10/22/2015 02:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Richard Peterson

Northbrook, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
miguel Liriano to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to miguelliriano

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

miguel Liriano

RALEIGH, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Lipiew to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to blipiew

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public must know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow FOREIGN money to influence OUR U.S. elections.

Barbara Lipiew

West Seneca, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Mullinax to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to thefarm

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Mullinax

Dalton, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
mike frobenius to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mbikes

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

mike frobenius

mcperson, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Gajewski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gajewskimary

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mary Gajewski

Bloomington, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Vito Degrigoli to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vito

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Vito Degrigoli

Palm Springs, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy Watson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to momwat

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy Watson

Sebastopol, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donald Hurtubise to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hurtubise.don

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donald Hurtubise

Oak Ridge, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Daniel Safer to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to saferdan

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Daniel Safer

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Ross to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jracon

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Ross

Milwaukie, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Karen Peterson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to karenp735

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Karen Peterson

Northbrook, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Leila Zaharopoulos to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to leilanizam

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Leila Zaharopoulos

West Hills, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edward Day to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eddy.day55

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Edward Day

Orlando, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wayne Pfeffer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wpfeffer

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Wayne Pfeffer

Centralia, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wayne Pfeffer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wpfeffer

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Wayne Pfeffer

Centralia, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Diana Rankin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to singet47

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Diana Rankin

Long Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Elisabeth Pelham to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to epelham

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Elisabeth Pelham

Galveston, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Peter Jardine to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pfj41

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Peter Jardine

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Andrea Craig to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sandycraig5

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Andrea Craig

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ellen Stowers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wordsmith 167

10/22/2015 02:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ellen Stowers

Derry, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Morgane Thomsen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to queenmorg

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Morgane Thomsen

Belmont, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Roberta Lumsdon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rjlumsdon

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Roberta Lumsdon

Tampa, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Witt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wittshf

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Stephen Witt

Moneta, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lenny Obolsky to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lobolsky

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lenny Obolsky

CENTENNIAL, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Deirdre Jameson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to DJameson

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Deirdre Jameson

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wright E Harris III to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wrighteharrisiii

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Wright E Harris III

ferguson, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joanne Mershon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joannemershon

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joanne Mershon

Anaheim, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sandy Curry to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Scurry3

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sandy Curry

Scottsdale, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jim Dumas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dumas.jim

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jim Dumas

South Glens Falls, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Aida Tapalova to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to atapalova

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Aida Tapalova

Arlington, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
richard schmidt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rcschmidt

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

richard schmidt

Stuart, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robert Couchman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to rob

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Couchman

Hartland, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robin Mayhue to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rmayhue

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robin Mayhue

Hudson, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dirk De Lu to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tisberries

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dirk De Lu

Santa Cruz, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Don Price to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dcprice

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Don Price

Davis, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
R. Joel Denney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joeldenney

10/22/2015 02:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

R. Joel Denney

Oakland, CA

Re: Comment re: REG 2015-04
Al Lindsey to: IndependentSpending

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

I am happy for my comment to be made public. I hope the commissioners' actions in rejecting that petition are also made public, widely.

On Thu, Oct 22, 2015 at 1:06 PM, <IndependentSpending@fec.gov> wrote:

The Federal Election Commission has received your email comment on REG 2015-04 (Independent Spending by Corporations, Labor Organizations, Foreign Nationals, and Certain Political Committees).

Please note that your email, including any attachments, will be posted on the Commission's website and made available in the Commission's Public Records room. If you would like to withdraw your comment because it includes information that you do not wish to make public, please contact Ms. Amy Rothstein or Ms. Esther Gyory in the Office of the General Counsel at (202) 694-1526 or (202) 694-1650 within three business days of this email.

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tyler Newton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tyenewton

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tyler Newton

Cambridge, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Larmee to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Mlarmee

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Larmee

Livonia, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Cervantes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to city 10s

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Cervantes

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Donna Hart to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donnajhart

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Donna Hart

Export, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

michael wright to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to royalwulff7

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

michael wright

indianapolis, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patrick Barrows to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pbarrows29

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patrick Barrows

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Virginia Cowles to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vcowles

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Virginia Cowles

Richmond, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Bailly to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sewjung 14

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Bailly

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Frank Morra to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to fmorra 800

10/22/2015 02:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Frank Morra

Homestead, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joanne Thielen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joanne.thielen57

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joanne Thielen

Banning, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeremy Carter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Jycarter

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeremy Carter

Radford, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy Mueller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to helmutmueller

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy Mueller

Chapel Hill, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jill Morgan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to keare5

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jill Morgan

Menlo Park, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Mrs. P. D. Waterworth to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to pdwaterworth

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mrs. P. D. Waterworth

Seabrook, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Beth Stanberry to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rdtrtle

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Beth Stanberry

Asheville, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sherre Baker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sbaker91

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sherre Baker

Brooksville, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sally Drew to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Sally_drew

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sally Drew

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Henry Newhouse to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hanknewhouse

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Henry Newhouse

Florence, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michele Jones to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Michele.Jones

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michele Jones

Anderson, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
J A Moore to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to moore43ja

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

I want to know WHOSE $$$$$$ speech is drowning out my $ speech.

J A Moore

Lubbock, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Zone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mikezone

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Zone

GrandRapids, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Martha Geppert to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to martigeppert

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Martha Geppert

Belleville, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sandra Rando to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sandyrando

10/22/2015 02:18 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sandra Rando

Fairfield, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ali Minor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ali.minor1

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ali Minor

Lake Zurich, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Glynden Bode to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to glyndenbode

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Glynden Bode

Houston, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Inderjit Jaipaul to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ijaipaul

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Inderjit Jaipaul

Glen Mills, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Susan Smith-Denny to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to shopmtd

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Smith-Denny

Boulder, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Glen Anderson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to glenanderson

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The FEC is controlled by people who OPPOSE FAIR ELECTIONS.

WHAT AN OUTRAGE!

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Glen Anderson

Lacey, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Camille Kozlowski to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to camillekozlowski

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Camille Kozlowski

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Greg Laxer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to laxergreg 007

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Greg Laxer

Danielson, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jan Campbell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dogsrfun 1295

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jan Campbell

Elkton, FL

Re: Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paula Lynn to: IndependentSpending

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

Don't exactly remember. Since I do recommend investigation in non violent ways and no threats, go ahead.

On Thu, Oct 22, 2015 at 2:14 PM, <IndependentSpending@fec.gov> wrote:

The Federal Election Commission has received your email comment on REG 2015-04 (Independent Spending by Corporations, Labor Organizations, Foreign Nationals, and Certain Political Committees).

Please note that your email, including any attachments, will be posted on the Commission's website and made available in the Commission's Public Records room. If you would like to withdraw your comment because it includes information that you do not wish to make public, please contact Ms. Amy Rothstein or Ms. Esther Gyory in the Office of the General Counsel at (202) 694-1526 or (202) 694-1650 within three business days of this email.

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Brian Thornton to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to brian-thornton

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Brian Thornton

Clermont, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Willa Mann to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wmanngao

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Willa Mann

Santa Barbara, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
wendy osher to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wendy.osher

10/22/2015 02:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

wendy osher

ojai, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Margaret Boutell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mmboutell

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Margaret Boutell

Eugene, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jennifer Jerlstrom to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jerlstrom

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jennifer Jerlstrom

Anaheim, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Demore to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tademore

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Demore

Corpus Christi, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janet tufts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to janettufts

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Janet tufts

seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gail Lauinger to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to glauinge

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gail Lauinger

Mendocino, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
w leonard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wleonard04

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

w leonard

oak view, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Sandie to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sandiewd

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Sandie

Reno, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
vicki marlowe to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vicki.marlowe

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

vicki marlowe

saint paul, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
CURT CLAY to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to curtclay

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

CURT CLAY

Coos Bay, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robert Rivera to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to robbiemotogp

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Rivera

New York City, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Toepfer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mjttoepfer 5850

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mary Toepfer

Napoleon, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
E. W. Browne to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ewb2

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

E. W. Browne

Ithaca, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lloyd Loring to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lwloring

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lloyd Loring

South Bend, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bob Hayes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to billythdg

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bob Hayes

Socorro, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
M S Dillon III to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to msdillon

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

M S Dillon III

Coconut Grove, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sharon Holford to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to watersong41

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sharon Holford

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Buenker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jbuenker

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Buenker

Racine, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
mardi brick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marbrik

10/22/2015 02:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

mardi brick

Santa Cruz, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Peter Clark to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to 2peterclark

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Peter Clark

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Leslie Morrison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to leslie.c.morrison

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Leslie Morrison

Washington DC, DC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bruce Burleigh to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bdburleigh

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bruce Burleigh

O'Fallon, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elizabeth Melo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to emelo242

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Melo

Orlando, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynn Boone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to montessoricentres

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lynn Boone

Indianapolis, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Hope Pratt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hopepratt

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Hope Pratt

Rogue Bluffs, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeane Harrison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jlhgg

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jeane Harrison

Des Moines, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Holley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to thomasholley

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Holley

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sipke Huismans to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sipke.huismans

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sipke Huismans

Amsterdam, ot

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Mark Bishop to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to marbis99

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Bishop

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Allan Breit to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to allan

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Allan Breit

West Hollywood, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Beberman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dbeberman

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

>my comment

The people get the government they "deserve". One of the most common mistakes throughout history by those in power is to assume they will remain in power. Thus they create power structures that attempt to consolidate power in only a handful of people -- i.e. kings, dictators, etc. They never realize that someone else can come along and take over the power structure now that it is in place, stripping them of their power, with no means to regain it. The US Constitution is written specifically to protect against this, and avoid this obvious historical problem. The Citizen United ruling, and everything following it, clearly shows the ignorance of the history of power. The FEC's job, at least, what I think it is, is to protect the constitutional protections put in place to avoid such mistaken power structures. Business millionaires, billionaires are the worst people to go to for advice on how to protect the general public's freedoms. Their mindset is that they want to collect all the business power they can, not to distribute power. This is what has worked for them within their personal history. The history of politics is far far beyond that horizon. The FEC must look beyond the short term, short sighted power ambitions of the truly misguided and recognize the historical significance of its intended purpose. To steal a quote, "those who can not remember history, are doomed to repeat it".

David Beberman

Holden, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Aaron Waldman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to waldmanaaron

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Aaron Waldman

York, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
j m to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jbmanes

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

j m litchfield, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Pearson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dkl.pearson

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Pearson

Marysville, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Pearson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dkl.pearson

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Pearson

Marysville, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

+Thomas H. Hooker Jr., M.S., L.P.C., D.Div.

To: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Thomas.Hooker.LPC

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

+Thomas H. Hooker Jr., M.S., L.P.C., D.Div.

Garland, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lisa Kilpatrick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lisa

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lisa Kilpatrick

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Julissa Fernandez to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to italafersal

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Julissa Fernandez

Parkville, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Donna Kuck to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donnakuck53

10/22/2015 02:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donna Kuck

Emeryville, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edgar Cook to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eddycook86

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Edgar Cook

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Charles Ellis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to chasellis3

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Charles Ellis

Washington, DC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gabriel Lautaro to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to djriddm

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Gabriel Lautaro

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dennis Maroney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Dennismaroney

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dennis Maroney

Nahant, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

DOMONICK JACKSON to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to domonickj

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

DOMONICK JACKSON

Raleigh, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Klaus Meyer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to klausitomeyer

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Klaus Meyer

jupiter, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gary Hansen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to garyhansen

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Gary Hansen

Eagan, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Alexander Honigsblum to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ahonigs

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alexander Honigsblum

Dubuque, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jane Hite to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bjhite

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jane Hite

Asheville, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
JoAnn Keller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joannk780

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

JoAnn Keller

Lafayette, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Andrea Potocny to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ampotocny

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Andrea Potocny

Newark, DE

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jacqueline Edwards to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jaci929

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jacqueline Edwards

Bedford, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Corbett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pcorbett

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Corbett

Cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Frankie Harvey-Shea to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to fharveyshea

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Frankie Harvey-Shea

Redmond, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wanda Niemi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Wandakayniemi

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Wanda Niemi

Springfield, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
c peters to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to camp6ell

10/22/2015 02:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

c peters

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lawrence Brown to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lhbrown 13

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lawrence Brown

Burlington, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Della Hamlin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Webb_city

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Della Hamlin

Joplin, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Julia Roberto to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Juliaroberto31

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Julia Roberto

Boston, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Russ Ramirez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Yaquidan

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Russ Ramirez

Costa Mesa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jason Day to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jason

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jason Day

Norcross, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Hunt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hunt0

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Hunt

Fallbrook, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Terry flakus to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to flake342

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Terry flakus

Sioux Falls, SD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Molly Huddleston to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mollyb

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Molly Huddleston

Santa Rosa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gary Hardin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gary

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Gary Hardin

Boulder, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lavonne Moss to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mosses2

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lavonne Moss

Miamisburg, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Klaus Steinbrecher to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kps

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Klaus Steinbrecher

Angel Fire, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Diane Ryerson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to adryerson 7

10/22/2015 02:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Diane Ryerson

Arcata, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

teresa b beauregad to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to terryb504

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

teresa b beauregad

new Orleans, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael Schramm to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mcs363

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Schramm

Bayville, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nelda McLaughlin to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to nelda60

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nelda McLaughlin

Farmington, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Doty to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to politicos

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Doty

Santa Fe, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Maxx Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mmil0711

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Maxx Miller

New Hyde Park, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jo Ann Brooks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joannbrooks36

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jo Ann Brooks

Madison, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeanine Kahrs to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Jninek9

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeanine Kahrs

Byhalia, MS

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Roberto Freeman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to freemangrp

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Roberto Freeman

Honolulu, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bill Hessel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Whessell

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Bill Hessel

Oak view, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dorothy Larsen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Dorothyjanel

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dorothy Larsen

Plainsboro, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Gray to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to david.gray

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Gray

Benson, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Henriette Groot to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hplgroot

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Henriette Groot

Los Osos, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Guenter Zuelow to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gzuelow

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Guenter Zuelow

Waukegan, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Freiband to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lfreiband

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Linda Freiband

Hampton Bays, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Georgia Lynn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nitella40

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Georgia Lynn

Bakersfield, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Randolph Willoby to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rwilloby

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Randolph Willoby

Webster, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jacques Bourgeacq to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jacquesbourgeacq

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jacques Bourgeacq

Coralville, Iowa, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rebecca Morgan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rrmorgan 1357

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Rebecca Morgan

Clermont, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Norvelle Couch to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to necouch2

10/22/2015 02:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Norvelle Couch

Parker, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ralph Glick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ralphglick

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ralph Glick

Florence, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Piero Zoro to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to astarkas

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Piero Zoro

Houston, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Vivian Schatz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vivianschatz

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Vivian Schatz

PPhiladelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elsine Edell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to elaine

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elsine Edell

Westlake Village, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Brian Kuhn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to briankuhn 7

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Brian Kuhn

Santa Monica, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robert Haavind to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bhaavind

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Haavind

Rock Hill, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gloria Alpern to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gloriaalpern

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gloria Alpern

Valley Village, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Al Narbutis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to recinator

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Al Narbutis

Elkins Park, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Maniatis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to yanni.maniates

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Maniatis

Morrisville, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kevin Shaffer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to shaffer.kevin

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

{Why should each person consider becoming corporate persons individually, to seek a partial 'equal voice' in what's said to be a representative democracy based on a republic?}

Kevin Shaffer

Moose Pass, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dennis Kent to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to denniskent

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dennis Kent

Honaunau, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stanley Charles to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to srcharles 1

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stanley Charles

Fort Mill, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Laura Foner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to laura.foner

10/22/2015 02:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Laura Foner

Jamaica Plain, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Vincent Nicoletti to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vjnick

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Vincent Nicoletti

Littleton, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Baecker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Pfbeck74

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Patricia Baecker

Lancaster, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Karen Christian to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kcaz 1

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Karen Christian

Vail, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Elaine Livesey-Fassel to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to livesey-fassel

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Elaine Livesey-Fassel

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

William 'Skip' Dykoski to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to skipdykoski

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

William 'Skip' Dykoski

New Brighton, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Hughes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rhughes

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Richard Hughes

KERBY, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paul Westlund to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to avalanche.paul

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Paul Westlund

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ben Lichtin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gsbl

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ben Lichtin

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Klocke to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tomokansas

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Klocke

Lawrence, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jim Farrell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jimfa

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jim Farrell

FAIRBANKS, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Art Sheldon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to asheldon.cp81

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Art Sheldon

Duluth, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeffery Green to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jeffgreen 54

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeffery Green

Frankfort, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Turner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Thomasturner 8839

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Turner

Lynnwood, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bridget Wyatt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bridgetmichelle07

10/22/2015 02:26 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bridget Wyatt

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ginger Sebastian to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Gsebastian49

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ginger Sebastian

Sedona, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Corrigan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to JimCorri49

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James Corrigan

Brookfield, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Phillip J Crabill to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to crab430

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Phillip J Crabill

Little Elm, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Annie McMahon to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to river

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Annie McMahon

Clarkdale, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
ben carpenter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bcarpenter

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

ben carpenter

oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

standley claussen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Stand

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

standley claussen

Bellingham, WA, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Matthew Burton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mattheweburton

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Matthew Burton

Cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patrick Naylor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Patricknaylor

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Patrick Naylor

Boulder, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Longacre to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to davidomon

10/22/2015 02:27 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Longacre

Toledo, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Paul to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Panda 1999

10/22/2015 02:28 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Paul

NEW YORK, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
gretchen schulz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to schulzg

10/22/2015 02:28 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

gretchen schulz

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Junior Zen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Jnrzen

10/22/2015 02:28 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Junior Zen

Los Alamitos, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dottie Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mydot

10/22/2015 02:28 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dottie Miller

Boynton Beach, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ann Siegel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to annssiegel

10/22/2015 02:28 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ann Siegel

Highland Park, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Regan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to regan-c

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Carol Regan

Kansas City, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steve Bye to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to s_bye

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Steve Bye

SAINT ANTHONY, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Zola Packman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to zmpackman

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Zola Packman

Raleigh, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Brian M. Scott to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bm.brian

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

The contortions that were required merely to get this petition filed are prima facie evidence that the situation is out of hand.

Brian M. Scott

Cleveland Heights, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Downing to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jp99down

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Downing

Richmond, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dianne German to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to deweygerman

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dianne German

Dewey, Az, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dianne German to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to deweygerman

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dianne German

Dewey, Az, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Richard Casagrande to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to racasagra

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Why should we, the public, not be privy to information so we can make our choices based on fact not on campaign rhetoric

Richard Casagrande

WANTAGH, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Theresa Kozlow to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tkozlow

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Theresa Kozlow

Mt. Laurel, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sara DuBois to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sarai1944

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sara DuBois

Renton, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
jo stokes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to josbodybalance

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

jo stokes

Highland Village, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Margery Stone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pelstone

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Margery Stone

Shelocta, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark Roberts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to markchristopher.roberts

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Roberts

Houston, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Peter Lee to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to peter0607

10/22/2015 02:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Peter Lee

Pomona, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Brewer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brwj 1

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Brewer

Marietta, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ann O'Connell to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to annloc

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ann O'Connell

Florence, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
J. Arlene Ronda to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jaronda51

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

J. Arlene Ronda

Homer, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Roberto Romo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to neospyder316

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Roberto Romo

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gary Arbeiter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gearbeiter

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gary Arbeiter

Bloomington, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Evan McDermitt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to evanmcdermit

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Evan McDermitt

Fullerton, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Raymond Chan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rc.raychan

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Raymond Chan

Flushing, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
john markoff to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jm2

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

john markoff

pittsburgh, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
annette schmidt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to annette227

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

annette schmidt

phila, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Hanson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ahanson

10/22/2015 02:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

I would also like to see it illegal for Unions to financially support candidates. If I want to support candidate X, I should simply send my money to his/her campaign fund. I don't want a union I belong to sending my union dues to support a candidate I don't support just because the union hierarchy says so.

David Hanson

Vestal, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gerald Gras to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gerrygras

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gerald Gras

Palo Alto, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Timothy Schacht to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to drtim

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Timothy Schacht

Grosse Pointe Park, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Basileo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mbasileo

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Basileo

Fort Washington, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Mary Jo DeLavan to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mj_d

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mary Jo DeLavan

Midland, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jennifer Sprague to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jbsprague

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jennifer Sprague

Olympia, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
sarah dana to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sarahdana

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

sarah dana

cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Andrew Levesque to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to offdeadsomewhere

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Andrew Levesque

Caribou, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chinghiz Mamedov to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to chinghiz.us787

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Chinghiz Mamedov

Baku city, ot

Comment re: REG 2015-04
D O'Dowd to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sda_albion

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

D O'Dowd

Albion, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bill Kelsey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to billkelsey

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Bill Kelsey

Woodinville, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
dan volpatti to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to davalpatti

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

dan volpatti

pittsburgh, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Howard Young to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to younghoward55

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Howard Young

Boston, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joyce Finlay to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joywfinlay

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joyce Finlay

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
George Harris to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gh 12345

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

George Harris

Virginia Beach, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ido Kek to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to idokek

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ido Kek

Pahoa, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kenneth Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to klmiller

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kenneth Miller

North Lima, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ralph Dietlin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ralph300

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ralph Dietlin

Mount Morris, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Stephanie Reader to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to steffyreader

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Stephanie Reader

Los Altos, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
phyllis wender to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to phylliswender

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

phyllis wender

NYC, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Andrew Sieff to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sandrew

10/22/2015 02:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Andrew Sieff

COLUMBIA, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Elizabeth Peterson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to elsiewp

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Peterson

Huntsville, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Graver to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rigraver

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Graver

Vincentown, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Julie Spickler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pjspickler

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

After all, the Preamble to our Constitution starts with "WE the People of the United States," and a democracy ("rule by the people") cannot operate effectively without knowledge.

Julie Spickler

Menlo Park, CA, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David John to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to quilter

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David John

Toledo, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kimberly Picazo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kimmyface24

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kimberly Picazo

Las Vegas, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rose Ann Witt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rawitt

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rose Ann Witt

Thousand Oaks, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ronald & Mary Lockwood to: IndependentSpending

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

Please respond to anteater11

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ronald & Mary Lockwood

White Plains, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

LEE & SANDRA HEBERT to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to lhebert007

10/22/2015 02:32 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

LEE & SANDRA HEBERT

HAMPTON, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Barbara & Jim Dale to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to nonrev909

10/22/2015 02:33 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara & Jim Dale

Decorah, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alek Hyra to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 886426

10/22/2015 02:33 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes.

Alek Hyra

Springfield, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
trish cancilla to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mntcancilla

10/22/2015 02:33 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

trish cancilla

chg, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Woods to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eu4ium

10/22/2015 02:33 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Woods

North Hollywood, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Deborah Coble to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dccoble

10/22/2015 02:33 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Deborah Coble

Liverpool, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
melinda wagner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ans9w

10/22/2015 02:33 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

melinda wagner

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alek Hyra to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 886426

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections.

Alek Hyra

Springfield, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
keith scott to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kscmilp

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

keith scott

Milpitas, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Curtis Hughes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to burbled

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Curtis Hughes

Sanford, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janet Riordan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to janetmriordan

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janet Riordan

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marvin Moss to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mamoss3

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Marvin Moss

North Hills, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Will Harnage to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 8count

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Will Harnage

Santa Rosa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jim Sakolosky to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jsakolosky

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jim Sakolosky

Elizabeth City, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynn Bowdery to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lynn

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lynn Bowdery

New Paltz, NY, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

William and Christine Queen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to billchrisq

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

William and Christine Queen

Kapaa, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Leslie Boudrot to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lboudrot

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Leslie Boudrot

Minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ben Wiener to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brw565

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ben Wiener

Carpinteria, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Mark Dillingham to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to markdillingham

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Dillingham

Evergreen, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dan Clover to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kloverd

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dan Clover

Charlotte, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mike Divine to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mdvine9

10/22/2015 02:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mike Divine

Blaine, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Bro to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to harroun

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Bro

Montour, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
jennifer jelinek to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jjelinek

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

jennifer jelinek

janesville, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Teresa Sullivan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to spiritbody

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Teresa Sullivan

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jerry Papapanayotou to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jerrypapas

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jerry Papapanayotou

Montclair, NJ 07042, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Katharine Owen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to RNKOWEN

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should STRENGTHEN THE RULES AGAINST FOREIGN NATIONALS injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also REQUIRW FULL DISCLOSURE OF POLITICAL SPENDING AND PREVENT candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

DO YOUR JOB. THE VERY IDEA THAT SOME OF YOU CONSIDER CORPORATIONS PEOPLE, BUT DO NOT CONSIDER TWO OF YOUR MEMBERS PEOPLE IS ABSOLUTELY LUDICROUS!!! DO YOUR JOB!

Katharine Owen

Honolulu, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patrick Bosold to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bosolds

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

It is LONG past time for the FEC to start doing its job with regard to ending undisclosed election spending, coordination between super PACs and candidates, and foreign money's influence on U.S. elections.

What is it about this issue that the FEC commissioners do not understand? Super PACs devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate. There are close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them. How much more evidence do you need in order to ACT?

Enough already. Put stricter rules in place against coordination between candidates and super PACs. AND THEN ENFORCE THEM!

The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patrick Bosold

Fairfield, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Ripp to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rfraseripp

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Ripp

Sierra Vista, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Kuljian to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rkuljian

10/22/2015 02:35 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Kuljian

Lexington, MA