

Comment re: REG 2015-04
dianne lyons to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dslyons

10/22/2015 03:50 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

dianne lyons

Newbury Park, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
dianne lyons to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dslyons

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

dianne lyons

Newbury Park, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Pamela Reichmann to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to pamr

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Pamela Reichmann

Milwaukee, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeff Smith to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Jefran 1

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeff Smith

Reisterstown, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Yujen Hsia to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tedhsia

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Yujen Hsia

Honolulu, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Hooper to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rhooper1124

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Hooper

Raymore, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rachel Oliver to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ginrose

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rachel Oliver

Mariposa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Teresa Wall to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to twall0101

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Teresa Wall

Mesa, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Babbitt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to philad49

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Babbitt

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michelle Evans to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to michelleevans 299

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michelle Evans

Boise, ID

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Freda Ballas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to onedoodle

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Freda Ballas

Dallas, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
don wleklinski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to don.wleklinski

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

don wleklinski

Terre Haute, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Goodwin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to thgoodwin 1

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Goodwin

Lawrenceville, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Janice Hallman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jrhallman2

10/22/2015 03:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janice Hallman

Saint Paul, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Hathaway to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mhathaway 1

10/22/2015 03:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mary Hathaway

Rhinebeck, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pam Ward to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to p18ward

10/22/2015 03:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

This is simply ridiculous and unacceptable. Is this the democracy our founding fathers designed or all the servicemen died to protect?

Pam Ward

Andover, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jerry Hofrock to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to notebanker

10/22/2015 03:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Your job may not be easy, neither is mine. So either do it with vigor and honesty or resign.

Jerry Hofrock

Cedar Park, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Elizabeth Gutman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to egutman450

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Gutman

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Sands to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dsandsmd

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Sands

Fairfield, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Walter Zelnick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to waltzz

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Walter Zelnick

Novato, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
bETTE fELTHAM to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bfeltham

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

bETTE fELTHAM

Bellefontaine, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Patricia Copenhaver to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to patcope

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Copenhaver

Vallejo, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Daniel Kozminski to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dankoz29

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Daniel Kozminski

Solon, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
shaun murphy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to prnuash8

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

shaun murphy

fayetteville, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Bartlett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rbartlett 12

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Bartlett

Tarpon Springs, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lana La Fata to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lanalafata

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lana La Fata

Florissant, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nick Barber to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Nicholasoneillbarber

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nick Barber

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Louisa Passano to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to louisachadano

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Louisa Passano

Cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cheryl Snyder to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cjchem

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cheryl Snyder

Sunbury, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chris Holleman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cactuswren 1

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Chris Holleman

Oracle, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Helen Glidden to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hmg4600

10/22/2015 03:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Helen Glidden

Bellingham, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Sheena Thomas to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to fast219

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sheena Thomas

Des Moines, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judy Sachter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sachter

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judy Sachter

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bo Bergstrom to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bo.cinesthetic.30.yx

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bo Bergstrom

Silver City, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
s. gay to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to susangay 13

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

s. gay

cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dianne Howell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Dianne.r.howell

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dianne Howell

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kerry Canfield to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kakedabo

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Not only that, but the FEC should be willing to acknowledge that an individual is **always** a person, and that to assert otherwise is just silly and indefensible.

Thank you.

Kerry Canfield

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
DANNY Douglas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to n7dc

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

DANNY Douglas

Reva, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robyn Hively to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wyndance

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robyn Hively

Spokane, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Samuel Eaton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sam.eaton82

10/22/2015 03:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Samuel Eaton

Middletown, DE

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paul Werstein to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to paul.werstein

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Paul Werstein

Colorado Springs, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rob Turner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rob.fiauto

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rob Turner

Kettering, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Strauss to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to john.strauss

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Strauss

New Haven, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Tristan Scremin to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Tristanscremin

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tristan Scremin

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Margaret Albrecht to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lalaith 1977

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Margaret Albrecht

Pensacola, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Suzanne Wood to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to suzannewoodtr

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Suzanne Wood

Three Rivers, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Julia Schlegel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jwllwing

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Julia Schlegel

Richmond Heights, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Booher to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tedbarb

10/22/2015 03:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Booher

Troy, MT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Seaquist to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to d-seaquist

10/22/2015 03:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Seaquist

Waltham, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wade Galde to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to galde0127

10/22/2015 03:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Wade Galde

San Luis Obispo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
MK Bryan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to arallion73

10/22/2015 03:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

MK Bryan

Bothell, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Arthur Connor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to abconnor62

10/22/2015 03:56 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Arthur Connor

Idyllwild, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Adam Kay to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to adamkay47

10/22/2015 03:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Adam Kay

New Orleans, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

gary thomsen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to thomsens

10/22/2015 03:56 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

gary thomsen

newport beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jon Solmos to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jcsolmos

10/22/2015 03:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jon Solmos

Chesterton, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
glenn embrey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gtembrey

10/22/2015 03:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

glenn embrey

Redondo Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janet Blazyk to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to janetb50

10/22/2015 03:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janet Blazyk

ATHENS, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Port to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to port

10/22/2015 03:57 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Port

Bloomington, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Beaver to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to beaverbarbara

10/22/2015 03:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Beaver

Cincinnati, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jesus Carpio to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to believe3907

10/22/2015 03:57 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jesus Carpio

Bakersfield, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Daniels to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mwd7110

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Daniels

Albuquerque, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathleen Golden to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to golden.kathleen

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kathleen Golden

Volcano, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carla Cicchi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cjc2sea

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs.

The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Corporations are not people or U.S. Citizens! We are the people and the citizens! So, stop this criminal behavior between super PACs and candidates, and foreign money's influence in our U.S. elections now and forever!

Carla Cicchi

Placerville, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rolf Meyersohn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rmeyersohn

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rolf Meyersohn

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tom Denison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to denisont

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tom Denison

Corvallis, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Adam Boritz to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to letthereberock

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Adam Boritz

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kendra brooks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kendrakbrooks

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kendra brooks

seal beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carolyn Tokarz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to punkin 7466

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carolyn Tokarz

Lenoir City, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Eric Haskins to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ehaskins

10/22/2015 03:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Eric Haskins

Hilo, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
eric hubbard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tadpole247

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

eric hubbard

port st lucie, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Janice Claussen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to janice

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janice Claussen

Bellingham WA, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Sousa to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to onemoorei

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Sousa

Warren, RI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nalei Kahakalau to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to haloa

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nalei Kahakalau

Honoka`a, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Tracy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rtracy

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Disclosure of the relationship between a super PAC and its associated campaign committee needs to be more clearly enforced; otherwise campaign corruption is more apparent to the voters.

Robert Tracy

Elmhurst, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Bernard Miszczak to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bmiszczak

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bernard Miszczak

Milwaukee, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Meredith Van Ry to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to angievanry

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Meredith Van Ry

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Husband to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tc.fredricks

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Husband

Waldport, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Claytor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to patclaytor

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Claytor

Webster Groves, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Donald White to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dwhite2

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donald White

Rexford, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Mylee Khristoforov to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Mylemk

10/22/2015 03:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mylee Khristoforov

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Martin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to corchard

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Martin

Crab Orchard, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joe Wiederhold to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jwiederhold47

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joe Wiederhold

Bellingham, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joe Urla to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joseurla

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joe Urla

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Luther Christian to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Lthchrist

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Luther Christian

Huntsville, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sondra Birkenes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to SondraBirkenes

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sondra Birkenes

Placitas, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
keri briggs to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to troublescomin 70

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

keri briggs

Fort Wayne, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Donald Hook to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dhook08

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donald Hook

Windom, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Roberta Brown to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to diverbobbi

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Roberta Brown

Chevy Chase, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Christine Williams to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to clwillnc

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Christine Williams

Lexington, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Veiga to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lav.mjv

10/22/2015 04:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Veiga

Plymouth, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ruth B Moynihan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ruthmoyn

10/22/2015 04:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ruth B Moynihan

Storrs, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Napierski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to u2me

10/22/2015 04:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Napierski

chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rita Heinz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ritaheinz

10/22/2015 04:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Rita Heinz

ashland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Betty Johnson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to amiblou

10/22/2015 04:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Betty Johnson

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Connor Duffy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to connor.g.duffy

10/22/2015 04:01 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Connor Duffy

Norwood, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeni Douglass to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jdouglass

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jeni Douglass

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
C McDonnell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to catchamcd

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

C McDonnell

West Sacramento, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Vinnedge Lawrence to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to vlawrence 1

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Vinnedge Lawrence

West Baldwin, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Wardwell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to veewardwell

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Wardwell

Liberty, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

J. Michael \Mike\ Henderson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mhenderson 13

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

J. Michael "Mike" Henderson

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Arabella Dorth to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to adorth

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Arabella Dorth

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Solomon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to david

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Solomon

Silver Spring, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Barbara Stanford Tanguma to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tangumaj

10/22/2015 04:02 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Stanford Tanguma

Arvada, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Stutsman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to straittojunkmail

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Stutsman

glendale, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
JOHN MARLEY to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to john.m.marley

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

JOHN MARLEY

NEWTOWN SQUARE, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lawrence Prichard to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to lwprichard 1960

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lawrence Prichard

Kent, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jared Feltner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jaredjfeltner

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jared Feltner

Jackson, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Esther Leonard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dawnstar 1937

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Esther Leonard

Huntington, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kerry Klutka to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kklutka

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kerry Klutka

Santa Fe, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
E. Kittell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kittbike

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

E. Kittell

Moscow, ID

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jessica Sutter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jessicalaughlin 77

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jessica Sutter

Orland Park, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Kenney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mikekenney48

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Kenney

Orland Park, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kerry Klutka to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kklutka

10/22/2015 04:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kerry Klutka

Santa Fe, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04

nina greenberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nina

10/22/2015 04:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

nina greenberg

los angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
marvin Feldman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tikkun

10/22/2015 04:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

marvin Feldman

CAPT. COOK, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jayson&Audrey Dilcher to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jaysondilcher

10/22/2015 04:04 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jayson&Audrey Dilcher

Slatington, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Walter Bunnell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tony

10/22/2015 04:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Walter Bunnell

Bernalillo, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marjorie Taft to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to taftmarj

10/22/2015 04:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Also the PACs flowing dark money into campaigns will ultimately bring an end to "by the people, for the people" in the near future. In some elections I think it already has!

Marjorie Taft

Stratham, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
david j. lafond to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to djlafond

10/22/2015 04:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

david j. lafond

Holyoke, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Sarah Wiebenson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to petillante

10/22/2015 04:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sarah Wiebenson

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Suzan Labby to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sklabby

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Suzan Labby

Wasilla, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Liter Spence to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to riverman 035

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Liter Spence

Cortez, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

matt woodward to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mattwoodward

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

matt woodward

seal beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sue Pettengill to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to petnal

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

I look forward to hearing how you intend to implement the Law.

Sue Pettengill

Duvall, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jack Simel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jacksimel

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jack Simel

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Gibson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to davidgibson 1

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Gibson

Reno, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Sheryl Schmatjen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tealirish

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sheryl Schmatjen

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

anthony montapert to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to amontapert

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

anthony montapert

ventura, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Vera Loewer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to veraloewer

10/22/2015 04:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Vera Loewer

Pacifica, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
joseph dorsey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to technocrat2

10/22/2015 04:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

joseph dorsey

san pablo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marjorie Ivey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to m_ivey

10/22/2015 04:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marjorie Ivey

St. Louis, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jean Hodgins to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jivhodgins

10/22/2015 04:06 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jean Hodgins

Ballston Spa, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Byron Boldrini to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to animalmother 14

10/22/2015 04:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Byron Boldrini

Pittsburg, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Fred/Mary Worman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to worman

10/22/2015 04:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Fred/Mary Worman

Warrensburg, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lovice Holland to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lovice.holland

10/22/2015 04:06 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lovice Holland

Naples, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marcia Caldwell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to homes2love

10/22/2015 04:06 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Marcia Caldwell

Sedona, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gerald Ney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kumquatquince

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gerald Ney

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ann Biegelsen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to damann37

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ann Biegelsen

Fort Collins, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Rosemary Hallinan to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to brhallinan

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Rosemary Hallinan

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Pohl to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mensan 13

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Pohl

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

JOSEPH SCHWEIGERT to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to joeyschweigert

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

JOSEPH SCHWEIGERT

ASBURY PARK, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

john clement to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to french 200

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

john clement

humtington bh, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Owens to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to xxowens

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard Owens

Annandale, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Peter Butt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to peter314

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Peter Butt

San Pedro, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Barbara Bonfield to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bgbonfield

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Bonfield

tACOMA, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Harvey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jeharvey59

10/22/2015 04:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Harvey

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joyce Hansen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jerry521

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joyce Hansen

Ferryville, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Judith & Robert Barney to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to barney.judith

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judith & Robert Barney

Solana Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Rigsby to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Turkeyguy

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Rigsby

Embudo NM 87531, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Craig Farrow to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Mrfarrow

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Craig Farrow

Shawnee, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jacob Reddig to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jbr1872

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jacob Reddig

Webster, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Cathy Goodrich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cathyg 1941

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cathy Goodrich

Verdugo City, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Samuel Vance to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to slvance

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Samuel Vance

Huntsville, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Valerie Holland to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to karma 755

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Valerie Holland

Kalaheo, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Fred/Mary Worman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to worman

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Fred/Mary Worman

Warrensburg, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Scott Guidos to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sguidos

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Scott Guidos

Albuquerque, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Brent Ragan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brentragan

10/22/2015 04:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Brent Ragan

Haiku, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Katherine Alice Tylczak to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ktylczak

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Katherine Alice Tylczak

Federal Way, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lester Jamieson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to artisan 3

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lester Jamieson

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jerry Hansen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to joyce66

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jerry Hansen

Ferryville, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Shanesy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to carol.shanesy

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

Enough already! The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Carol Shanesy

Croton on Hudson, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Evelyn Verrill to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to im2valla

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Evelyn Verrill

Prescott, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Fred/Mary Worman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to worman

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Fred/Mary Worman

Warrensburg, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Julie Martin to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to julamartin 10

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Julie Martin

Frederic, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Kawtoski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sue.kawtoski

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Kawtoski

Center Valley, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sean Wingate to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to SeanWingate

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sean Wingate

Tatum, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Irwin Stopa to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to istopa

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Irwin Stopa

Bradenton Fl 34205, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
valerie clark to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vclark1947

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

valerie clark

Needham, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Hudson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jhbigrasshopper

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Hudson

Kansas City, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Spina to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to msny235

10/22/2015 04:09 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Spina

Holbrook, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Glenn Allen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to glennallen

10/22/2015 04:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Glenn Allen

New Orleans, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Teri Endrich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tlendrich26

10/22/2015 04:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Teri Endrich

Antioch, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
cynthia gibbs to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ceejshop

10/22/2015 04:10 PM

Our democracy counts on the FEC.

on the FEC The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

cynthia gibbs

richmond, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Colleen Smith to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to colleenmsmith 71

10/22/2015 04:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Colleen Smith

Madison, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas West to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mellenmail

10/22/2015 04:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas West

Dallas, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Suzanne Drum to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to suzydrum

10/22/2015 04:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Suzanne Drum

Bisbee, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Susan Brennan to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to slvbrennan

10/22/2015 04:11 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Brennan

Phillipsburg, NJ

Re: Comment re: REG 2015-04
Suzanne Drum to: IndependentSpending

10/22/2015 04:11 PM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Halsey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bob.halsey

10/22/2015 04:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Halsey

Annandale, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Raymond Hagberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to raymond.hagberg

10/22/2015 04:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Raymond Hagberg

Spencer,, NE

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rita-Ann FitzGerald to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rfg111

10/22/2015 04:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rita-Ann FitzGerald

Essex, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Grace Golata to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ggolata

10/22/2015 04:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Grace Golata

Milwaukee, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cynthia Folit to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cfolit85

10/22/2015 04:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cynthia Folit

Sarasota, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

dean biesemeyer to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to deanbies

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

dean biesemeyer

Ronan, MT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
S Jespersen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wednesday 13

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

S Jespersen

Renton, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Shirley Brown to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to shirley 109

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Shirley Brown

Maryville, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Howard Blaz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to howardblaz

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Howard Blaz

Saint Cloud, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynn Bengston to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Lynnb

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lynn Bengston

Belchertown, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Hannah Banks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hbankstoo

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Hannah Banks

Newton, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kathleen Boston to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kboston

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathleen Boston

Columbus, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elly Bross to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Minielly

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Elly Bross

Hypoluxo, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
J Noble to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gratefulbe

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

J Noble

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Valerie Face to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vdf

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

We the people need to know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence our votes. The current lack of full public disclosure of campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC must restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from us while trying to influence our votes. The FEC must also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Valerie Face

Santa Clara, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patrick Annabel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to parzival 1

10/22/2015 04:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. Stop the hypocrisy! Stop playing politics! The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Patrick Annabel

Walla Walla, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sandra Lagrega to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to slagrega

10/22/2015 04:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sandra Lagrega

Arlington, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dean H. Strong to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to rocxter

10/22/2015 04:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dean H. Strong

Sayville, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ruth Morton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rimorton 6

10/22/2015 04:13 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ruth Morton

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lynn Walker to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mooncrone

10/22/2015 04:13 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lynn Walker

Cleveland, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
christian mittendorf to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cdmittendorf

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

christian mittendorf

richmond, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Angela Cresser to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to acresser

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.
PLEASE DO YOUR JOBS. OUR DEMOCRACY DEPENDS ON IT.

Angela Cresser

Warwick, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Todd Langton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tlangton

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Todd Langton

Maplewood, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
K Lewis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kevinglewis

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

K Lewis

Fox Lake, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kathy McKinney to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kathy010148

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kathy McKinney

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kathy McKinney to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kathy010148

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kathy McKinney

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Paul Pysher to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to thepyshers

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Paul Pysher

Bath, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
C.L. Milko to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to clrmlite

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

C.L. Milko

Cary, N.C., NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Caleb Wright to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wright0510

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Caleb Wright

Corinth, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Keven Johansen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kevenwjohansen

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Keven Johansen

Salt Lake City, UT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ron Standley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ronstandley 7

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

Corporations are NOT poeple - they can't vote because they can't pull the freakin' levers - no hands, ya see! Now fix this!

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ron Standley

Larkspur, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
kevin brennan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kjblc 123

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

kevin brennan

frankford, DE

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Charles Pittman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pitmo2

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Charles Pittman

Vero Beach, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Randy Vogel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to randyvogel

10/22/2015 04:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Randy Vogel

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Rebecca Nesline to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mesline

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Rebecca Nesline

Dover, DE

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nicki Listerman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to nlisterman

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nicki Listerman

Lawrence, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Remijio Broviak to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to remi.broviak

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Remijio Broviak

Mapleton, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Petra Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to petra.m.miller

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Petra Miller

Lost Creek, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Petra Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to petra.m.miller

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Petra Miller

Lost Creek, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mildred Huffmire to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mamahuff

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mildred Huffmire

South Salem, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nicholas Cortez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cortezn.68p

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nicholas Cortez

San Antonio, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Carole F. Seddon to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to CAROLESEDDON

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Carole F. Seddon

Baltimore, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Corrine Egan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cegan 1128

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Corrine Egan

ERIE, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Deborah Kahkejian to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to Kahkej398

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Deborah Kahkejian

Williamstown, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Eda to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to judyeda

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should ENFORCE this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and should close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judith Eda

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jay Brodsky to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to choctw

10/22/2015 04:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jay Brodsky

Murphy, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joe Floyd to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to o1aplwyd

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joe Floyd

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joe Floyd to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to o1aplwyd

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joe Floyd

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sharon Jeter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sjeter55

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sharon Jeter

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Wilson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to johnwilson333

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Wilson

Magdalena, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Phyllis Erwin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to perwin 1943

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Phyllis Erwin

Guilford, VT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Raven Haber to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to moonlight69raven

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Raven Haber

North Bergen, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chris Ekstedt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to auroastra

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Chris Ekstedt

High Point, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bruce Hlodnicki to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bjh55

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it impossible to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections.

Foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue critical right now during this upcoming election cycle. The FEC should be strengthening the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Bruce Hlodnicki

INDIANAPOLIS, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Gilbert to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gil

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Gilbert

Aiken, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

alice clemente to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to aclemente 156

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

alice clemente

cumberland, RI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dorothy Nelson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dnelson 1957

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dorothy Nelson

Simi Valley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kevin McKaig to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to knckaig 72

10/22/2015 04:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kevin McKaig

Northfield, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sylvia Staub to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sylvia Staub

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sylvia Staub

Springfield, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
S. Eynon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to saeynon

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

S. Eynon

Richmond, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paul Kesler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pr19kesler

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Paul Kesler

Bridgeport, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edward Morgan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to epm2

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Edward Morgan

Bethlehem, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy Fohs to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to boodah58

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nancy Fohs

Bullhead City, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Francis Butts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to okolehau 1

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Francis Butts

Georgetown, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Francis Butts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to okolehau 1

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Francis Butts

Georgetown, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Simon Pristoop to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to r176589

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Simon Pristoop

Indian Harbour Beach, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
maria pileidi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to maria.pileidi

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

maria pileidi

dublin, AK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ibrahim Ali to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ibrahimjali

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ibrahim Ali

Minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Daniel Bowles to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to captaindan46

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Daniel Bowles

Venice, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Leslie Shipley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Leslieashipley

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Leslie Shipley

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Gass to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cbmgass

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carol Gass

Davis, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
karen stickney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kstick35

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

karen stickney

lewiston, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janis Hollenbeck to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Janis.Hollenbeck

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Janis Hollenbeck

Saint Paul, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
L Baker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Lbarkah56

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. Otherwise, you don't have democracy! The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections. We're aware of your classist games.

L Baker

Ashboro, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dirk Sayers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dirksayers

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dirk Sayers

Laguna Niguel, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tod Davis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to todc.18

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tod Davis

Nashua, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janet Andrews to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to andrewsj5

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Janet Andrews

leonardtown, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Sanchez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to susiesanc

10/22/2015 04:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Sanchez

Bradenton, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Carol Gass to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to cbmgass

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Carol Gass

Davis, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Auer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to patricia .auer51

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Patricia Auer

Ballwin, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cynthia Conry to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Cindynsg

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cynthia Conry

Hinsdale, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia Purdy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jackpotp

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Purdy

Sylva, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Frances Goff to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to frananth

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Frances Goff

Valley Village, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Hazel Scotto to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hazelscotto

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Hazel Scotto

Pomona, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Adam Silva-Miramón to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to sangrieos

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Adam Silva-Miramón

Rochester, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
S. Eynon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to saeynon

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

S. Eynon

Richmond, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
michael boyle to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gpmikeboyle

10/22/2015 04:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

michael boyle

mentor-lake, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nan La Fond to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to stardanz

10/22/2015 04:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nan La Fond

Traverse City, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kevin Rauch to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kpr365

10/22/2015 04:19 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kevin Rauch

Park Ridge, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ted Schultz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to the_ted

10/22/2015 04:19 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ted Schultz

Tulsa, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ed Orr to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edorr1

10/22/2015 04:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ed Orr

Oklahoma City, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Bonnie Odiorne to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bonniesophia

10/22/2015 04:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Bonnie Odiorne

Waterbury, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Masters to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mmasters

10/22/2015 04:19 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mary Masters

Orcas, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Brothers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bros 180

10/22/2015 04:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Brothers

Fairfield, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sandra Cantrell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to scantrell

10/22/2015 04:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sandra Cantrell

Eastland, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thelma Matlin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tmatlin

10/22/2015 04:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thelma Matlin

Reno, NV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pamela Nordhof to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pamnordhof

10/22/2015 04:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pamela Nordhof

Hamilton, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jacomina Newman-Osmon to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jacominasue

10/22/2015 04:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jacomina Newman-Osmon

Scottsdale, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dave Fronske to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to davefrons

10/22/2015 04:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dave Fronske

Flagstaff, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Hillman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lghillman

10/22/2015 04:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Hillman

Camarillo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Mark Molen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to molen0244

10/22/2015 04:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Molen

Salt Lake City, UT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joe Mabel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmabel

10/22/2015 04:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joe Mabel

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gretchen Olsen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gretchenolsen 1

10/22/2015 04:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gretchen Olsen

Goldendale, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Deborah Schumann to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dschumannmd

10/22/2015 04:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Deborah Schumann

Bethesda, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan DAvanzo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to alandavano

10/22/2015 04:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan DAvanzo

Burien, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
LIZ WALLACE to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lizw

10/22/2015 04:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

LIZ WALLACE

North Bend, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paul Schupp to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pschupp

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Paul Schupp

Tonawanda, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathleen Glover to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mandkglover

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathleen Glover

Burbank, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Skarie to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to meskarie

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mary Skarie

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elizabeth Watts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to elizabeth.watts

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Elizabeth Watts

Lynbrook, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Edward Carleton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to strether023

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Edward Carleton

Boston, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joyce Roberts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to srobertsroost

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joyce Roberts

Phoenix, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Denis O'Neal to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to do 1949

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Denis O'Neal

Morgan Hill, Ca, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

John Calabrese to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jcalabria 1

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Calabrese

De Pere, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mario Velarde to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to MarioV769

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mario Velarde

Miami Lakes, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
sharon weiner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to aerobic102

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

sharon weiner

scarsdale, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Carbley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to williamcarbley

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Carbley

Largo, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

James Thoman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jrthoman 1410

10/22/2015 04:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James Thoman

Hermitage, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynn Jamison to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jnlparkies

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lynn Jamison

Louisville, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Derek Knehans to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to diesirritate

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Derek Knehans

Albuquerque, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ruth Roberts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ruth.roberts

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ruth Roberts

Irwin, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Anne Dyner to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to annedyner

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Anne Dyner

Naperville, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Queen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to squeen1209

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Queen

Albuquerque, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Larry Bright to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lbrslps

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

It's past time to stop hiding behind technicalities which don't even hold water, and do something, or get the hell out of the kitchen - - or, alternatively, off the POT!!

Larry Bright

Ypsilanti, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jose Ortega to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to yaquimayo

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jose Ortega

BUCKEYE, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pierre Schlemel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to PFSchlemel

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pierre Schlemel

Old Bethpage, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
sharon lacy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to earthhrt

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

sharon lacy

sebastopol, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Don Diedrick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to diedrickdon

10/22/2015 04:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Don Diedrick

Kailua-Kona, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

alan klein to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to aklein71

10/22/2015 04:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

alan klein

Citrus Heights, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
BRIAN EASON to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brianeason62

10/22/2015 04:24 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

BRIAN EASON

SCOTTSDALE, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
R R Schneider Jr to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rrschneiderjr

10/22/2015 04:24 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

R R Schneider Jr

Bethlehem, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lawrence Leung to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to larrycleung

10/22/2015 04:24 PM

Transparency should be part and parcel of ALL public agencies, especially considering it is we, the public who finances them, and it is we, the public whom is governed by them.

Therefore, the public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lawrence Leung

Hancock, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tabitha Kiesel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tkgazelle

10/22/2015 04:24 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tabitha Kiesel

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lawrence Leung to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to larrycleung

10/22/2015 04:24 PM

Transparency should be part and parcel of ALL public agencies, especially considering it is we, the public who finances them, and it is we, the public whom is governed by them.

Therefore, the public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lawrence Leung

Hancock, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Tim Sawyer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sawyer_tim

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tim Sawyer

Tulsa, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Bell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to billebell

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Bell

Bristol, RI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Stark to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to stark.robert

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Stark

Houston, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gary Bender to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to garybenderafis

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gary Bender

Huntington Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Marlene Widmann to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to acuwoman

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Marlene Widmann

Kilauea, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joe Poole to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jrpoole5

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joe Poole

CROSS PLAINS, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Benson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rabenson72

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard Benson

Lawndale, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Elizabeth Roberts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eroberts6

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Roberts

La Jolla, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Martha Kasanow to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mdkasanow

10/22/2015 04:25 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Martha Kasanow

Washington, DC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lisa Silguero to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lsilguero2001

10/22/2015 04:26 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lisa Silguero

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gwendolyn Hall to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Stubers 14

10/22/2015 04:26 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gwendolyn Hall

San Antonio, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Marita Ravenhorst to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to rita52052

10/22/2015 04:26 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marita Ravenhorst

Lexington, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Melissa Wheeler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to melissa-wheeler

10/22/2015 04:26 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Melissa Wheeler

Belton, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Margaret Larrick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to maggielarrick

10/22/2015 04:26 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Margaret Larrick

Burien, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ned Long to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kolong

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ned Long

Los Osos, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan Gordon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cayuga.cayuga

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan Gordon

Camarillo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Justin Moreau to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Bjnmjmoreau

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Justin Moreau

Hillman MI 49746, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ann Frutkin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to annfrutkin

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ann Frutkin

Indianapolis, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Christine Lomaka to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to CLontheroad2

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Christine Lomaka

Portland, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Clare Abreu to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to clare.abreu

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Clare Abreu

Cambridge, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Robert and Barbara Trumbull to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to btrum50

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert and Barbara Trumbull

Montague, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joseph Moser to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to moserjos

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joseph Moser

Somerville, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

josette grossberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to josettegr

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

josette grossberg

Milwaukee, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Liz Cohen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to friend

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Liz Cohen

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jean Katayama to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jeankatayama

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jean Katayama

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Shishino-Cruz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Lshishinocruz

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Shishino-Cruz

Moorpark, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ray Martinez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rayzpitbulls

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ray Martinez

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Minene Chan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to xueyiluxlu

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Minene Chan

Panama City, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Zachary Cramer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to zachcramer

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Zachary Cramer

Chattanooga, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joseph Baker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bakerj13

10/22/2015 04:27 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joseph Baker

Plantation, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan Hoeffler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to arhoeffler

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan Hoeffler

Mesa, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bryan Bennett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bryan.a.bennett

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bryan Bennett

Kennesaw, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Randy Greenbaum to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to randygreenbaum

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Randy Greenbaum

Plain City, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jon Phipps to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jrhipps357

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

Typical, yet another front in the war on women! Excuse me, but women truly are genuine human beings, which makes them by far more people than corporations ever will be, completely regardless of whatever any activist judge ever says, and that includes Ms. Ann Ravel and Ms. Ellen Weintraub.

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jon Phipps

Brigham City, UT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Terri Weiss to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to terriweiss

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Terri Weiss

van nuys, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert O'Keane to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to okeane.robert

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert O'Keane

Colgate, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lu Parbery to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to blp

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lu Parbery

Florence, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alice Arwood to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Arwoodalice

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Alice Arwood

Rock Hill, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Brayfield to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to urb_forest

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Brayfield

Champaign, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Christine Browne to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to chrisebrowne

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Christine Browne

Ravensdale, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Linda Bennett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lindagentrybennett

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Bennett

Kalamazoo, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Helen Evelev to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to evelevhelen

10/22/2015 04:28 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Helen Evelev

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy Wirtz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nancy.wirtzlunde

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy Wirtz

Paradise, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jerry Cochran to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jeraco59

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jerry Cochran

Blackwell, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Geiger to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to geigerricharde

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Richard Geiger

Davenport, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alan Gordon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cayuga.cayuga

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alan Gordon

Camarillo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jody Schulman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jds.mail0601

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jody Schulman

Elkridge, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Boone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jimboone3

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Boone

Malden, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paul Palmer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to paulp

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Paul Palmer

Vacaville, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rebekah Laros to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rebekahlaros

10/22/2015 04:29 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Rebekah Laros

Novato, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Damon Byrd to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to deebird 101

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Damon Byrd

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dana & Nelda Snider to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dhasnider

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dana & Nelda Snider

Middelbury, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Laurice Ferris to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lferris 1

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Laurice Ferris

Chapel Hill NC, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pauline Kuyler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to plkuyler

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pauline Kuyler

flushing, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Leslie Powers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lesliepowers

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Leslie Powers

Nashville, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pearl korn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pearlkorn

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Pearl korn

Bronx, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Donk to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jdonk

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Donk

Goldsboro, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James abendroth to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to abenfam

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James abendroth

Bloomington, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robin Freisem to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rfreisem

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robin Freisem

Coatesville, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jane Keggi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmkeggi

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jane Keggi

Appleton, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alvin Courter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to al.courter

10/22/2015 04:30 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Alvin Courter

San Tan Valley, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Holly Mosher to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hollywoodnt

10/22/2015 04:31 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Holly Mosher

Venice, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Suzanne Wooldridge to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to srwretired

10/22/2015 04:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Suzanne Wooldridge

gravel switch, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donna Gleaves to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to donnhold

10/22/2015 04:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Donna Gleaves

Rancho Cordova, CA

Re: Comment re: REG 2015-04
Donna Gleaves to: IndependentSpending

10/22/2015 04:31 PM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Roberta Reid to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to BertaR5021

10/22/2015 04:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Roberta Reid

Bronx, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Vargyas to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tandev

10/22/2015 04:31 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Vargyas

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Madeleine Villatoro to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to catzen

10/22/2015 04:32 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Madeleine Villatoro

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nick Beck to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tritaylor8

10/22/2015 04:32 PM

HOW ABOUT WE JUST HAND OVER OUR DEMOCRACY TO ISIS? IF YOU REFUSE TO MONITOR THESE SOURCES-----WE ARE LEAVING OURSELVES WIDE OPEN!

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nick Beck

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Stephanie Gibert to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ggnol11

10/22/2015 04:32 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes.

The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections. Protect the majority of Americans not the tiny, rich oligarchy at the top

Stephanie Gibert

Montrose, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donna D Varcoe to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dmdv45

10/22/2015 04:32 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Donna D Varcoe

State College, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Corinna Jevons to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to corinna.jevons

10/22/2015 04:32 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Corinna Jevons

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
France Morrow to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bcgodbill7

10/22/2015 04:32 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

France Morrow

Yakima, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Erik Schnabel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to erikschnabel

10/22/2015 04:33 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Erik Schnabel

Greencastle, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dale LaCognata to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dalelacognata

10/22/2015 04:33 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dale LaCognata

Indianapolis, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Cindy Schnackel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to artbycindy

10/22/2015 04:33 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cindy Schnackel

Tempe, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jon Spitz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to plantbased.js

10/22/2015 04:33 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jon Spitz

Laytonville, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Colleen Clark to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to colleenjclark

10/22/2015 04:33 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Colleen Clark

Cambridge, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bennie Knight to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bkoolkat

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bennie Knight

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Rob Stonecipher to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to rstone71

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Rob Stonecipher

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Darrel Easter to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to deaster

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Darrel Easter

Bartlett, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
jeffrey daley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to daley.jeffrey

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

jeffrey daley

Hampton, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Larry Macey to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to lmacey

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Larry Macey

Gladstone, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kerry Moore to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kdmooore

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kerry Moore

Toledo, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tom Rowe to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rowethomas7

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Tom Rowe

Sacramento, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Sheffield to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to deepwoodell

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Carol Sheffield

Buckhannon, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sarah Harriman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to schnarriman

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sarah Harriman

Bath, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Asbury to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to michael.f.asbury

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Asbury

Loudonville, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Brodsky to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dbrodsky2

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

David Brodsky

East Cleveland, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kate Narveson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to narveska

10/22/2015 04:34 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kate Narveson

Decorah, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Angela Kneece to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to amkneece

10/22/2015 04:35 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Angela Kneece

Columbia, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kenneth Ennor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ksenor

10/22/2015 04:35 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kenneth Ennor

Snohomish, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Scott Toland to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to smt200

10/22/2015 04:35 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Scott Toland

Franktown, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sue Struthers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sstruthers

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sue Struthers

Riverside, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bill Roberts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to broberts 142

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bill Roberts

Springfield, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steven Johnson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to stevenej

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Steven Johnson

Willoughby, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathy Bilicke to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Scherkathy

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kathy Bilicke

Los angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dave Manso to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to deman4249

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dave Manso

North Grosvenordsle, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Dobkevich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dobkevich 1

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judith Dobkevich

Port Townsend, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marguerite King to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to valdetara

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Your Agency is allowing blatant bribery and theft of votes through manipulation of the system. I don't care what pressures you are under, what people are giving you orders to capitulate to pressures, if you are a red blooded American, "You Have to Understand What This Theft and Bribery is Doing to America, and You Have to Stand Up to It". Do not allow the few to impoverish the whole country, because soon, what goes around will come around, and they may be impoverishing you through manipulation of the system.

No one is safe the way the United States is being dismantled. Every one has to do their part and stand against the bullies. The rule of common sense and law based on common sense must rule and be respected.

Marguerite King

Earlton,, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sam Andujar to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to samandujar

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sam Andujar

New York City, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bruce Dreyer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Explorerss

10/22/2015 04:36 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Bruce Dreyer

Milwaukee, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ann Behar to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to acbehar7

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ann Behar

Washington, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
BC Shelby to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bcshelby

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

BC Shelby

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Janice Hudanish to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jhudanish

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Janice Hudanish

Carbondale, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Paul Roy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jpack9

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Paul Roy

Minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Brackney to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to michaelbrackney

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Brackney

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joseph Whittington to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to whittex

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joseph Whittington

Richmond Heights, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judy Madden to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jmadden3

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judy Madden

San Antonio, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Phillips to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to skphill

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Susan Phillips

Cottage Grove, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Karl Brooks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kemson

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Karl Brooks

Texas City, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Eric Robson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eric.robson

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Eric Robson

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Steve Westlake to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to steveowestlake

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Steve Westlake

Mishawaka, IN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

James M McGrann to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to octobris31

10/22/2015 04:37 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James M McGrann

Murphysboro, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kristin Young to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kristinn86

10/22/2015 04:38 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kristin Young

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mamie Bondy to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mibondy

10/22/2015 04:38 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mamie Bondy

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Cessna to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to stephen.cessna

10/22/2015 04:38 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stephen Cessna

Lansing, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

william klink to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to william-klink

10/22/2015 04:38 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

william klink

Iowa City, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Daphne Ching-Jackson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dchingjackson

10/22/2015 04:38 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Daphne Ching-Jackson

Long Beach CA, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nancy Sagafi-nejad to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to nancyblackesq

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy Sagafi-nejad

Laredo, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Miriah Reynolds to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mlr5037

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Miriah Reynolds

Birdsboro, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

John Praprotnik to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to praprotnik527

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Praprotnik

Phoenix, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Laurie Franklin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to franklinle

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Laurie Franklin

Richfield, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy Gingrich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nanseegee

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy Gingrich

Rohnert park, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Luci Fowler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to elismom

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Luci Fowler

New Port Richey, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Theresa Lianzi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to terlia

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Theresa Lianzi

Hollywood, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jeff Topping to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jjtopp

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jeff Topping

North Hollywood, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael Klausing to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mike_klausing

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Klausing

Nitro, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
cathy cretser to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cretserc

10/22/2015 04:39 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

cathy cretser

Vacaville, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Delores Stachura to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 1322wash

10/22/2015 04:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Delores Stachura

Herrin, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Samandi Adams to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to samandi

10/22/2015 04:40 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Samandi Adams

Fresno, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Roxann Carmean to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to rlcarmean

10/22/2015 04:40 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Roxann Carmean

Payson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Alfredo Tomasini to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to alto.tom

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Alfredo Tomasini

san jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

John Godfrey to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jackgodfrey4

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Godfrey

Wake Forest, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dorothy Shelton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Tollivershelton

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dorothy Shelton

Nashville, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Randal Parcel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to package_

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups.

The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Randal Parcel

Kirkland, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Albert to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to barbara.albert

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Albert

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Syron to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jvsyron

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Syron

Crestwood, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Basav Sen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to basav

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Basav Sen

Washington, DC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
lloyd reynolds to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lareyn

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

lloyd reynolds

fountain valley, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Colleen Doyle to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to colleen07

10/22/2015 04:41 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Colleen Doyle

Livermore, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gregry Loomis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gregryloomis

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gregry Loomis

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
mario bermeo to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mmbermeo

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

mario bermeo

san antonio, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Larry Cardamon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lcard48

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

I believe in the saying that in knowledge there is understanding. I don't understand why the FEC would be in favor of not only NOT seeking to find out who is helping to fund our elections, but is actively acting AGAINST disclosure of such a thing. Shame on you.

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections.

The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups.

The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Larry Cardamon

Waterloo, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Don & Ann Dougherty to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dna

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Don & Ann Dougherty

Moriarty, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bruce Sims to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to urrightto

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

The idea that corporations are people is not only flawed, but truly delusional. Corporations are NOTHING but legal constructs AND the founding fathers warned against such entities !!!

Bruce Sims

escondido, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rebecca Hickey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bullchance

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections. Do your job and take care of ALL Americans!!!

Rebecca Hickey

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
ROBERT NERGER to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to southernbobs

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

ROBERT NERGER

Naalehu, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Roman Bobak to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ray.bobak

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Roman Bobak

Pleasant Valley, NE

Comment re: REG 2015-04
elaine sclar to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to biensur469

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

elaine sclar

maplewood, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Heide Catherina Coppotelli to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to goodshepherd

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Heide Catherina Coppotelli

Cedar Mountain, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Calvin Burger to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to latinzn

10/22/2015 04:42 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Calvin Burger

Kansas City, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

John Templeton Sr to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to johnboy11sr

10/22/2015 04:43 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Templeton Sr

Amherst, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephen Scheeren to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Stephinsobe

10/22/2015 04:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Stephen Scheeren

Miami Shores, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Don Herve to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ddojobb

10/22/2015 04:43 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Don Herve

Andover, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynn Yellen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to esalynn

10/22/2015 04:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lynn Yellen

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dawn Storrud to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dawnstorrud

10/22/2015 04:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dawn Storrud

Greeley, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dr. Paul Binder to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pjbinder2

10/22/2015 04:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dr. Paul Binder

Sarasota, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Francisco Koch to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to francisco.koch67

10/22/2015 04:43 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Francisco Koch

North Hills, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
nikolai giefer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nikolaigiefer

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

nikolai giefer

los angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Siobhan McCafferty to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Siobhan

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Siobhan McCafferty

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
allen bauman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to allen.bauman

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

allen bauman

valley stream, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Myers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lindamyers227

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Myers

Louisville, KY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
pamela clutts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to calvinette 16

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

pamela clutts

jackson, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy Hunt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nrhunt

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy Hunt

Portland, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Phyllis Lisle to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to phyllis.lisle

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Phyllis Lisle

Sevierville, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rachel Clark to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to crae2009

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rachel Clark

Williamstown, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ronald S. Gister to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ron.gister

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ronald S. Gister

Charlotte, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jacquelyn Imbrogno to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to imagine 10940

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jacquelyn Imbrogno

Andover, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Carol Berendsen to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to cb 1943

10/22/2015 04:44 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carol Berendsen

Diablo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Conney Joa to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to c_joa

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Conney Joa

Elmhurst, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mark Carlson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to carlson.mark.raymond

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mark Carlson

St Louis Park, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Donald McGregor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dnmcg

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Donald McGregor

Clinton, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Aaron Kerwin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to aaron.kerwin

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Aaron Kerwin

Aurora, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pamela Kenny to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pwkenny8837

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pamela Kenny

Omaha, NE

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Brad Burns-Howard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bradburnshoward

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

I am retired, yet I make contributions to candidates for public office. I study their public statements and I do my best to support those candidates whom I believe will best reflect my values -- and their own. But I do not contribute my money through secrecy or via PACS. My contributions are recorded in the campaign finance reports generated by those candidates whom I support.

But the Citizens United decision has made a mockery of the election process. I believe that ultimately it will be overturned. In the meantime, I believe that it is your job as duly appointed members of the FEC to do all in your power to assure that our elections are fair, open and honest.

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Brad Burns-Howard

Bridgeport, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mitchell Alexander to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to maalexanderch 13

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mitchell Alexander

Overland Park, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
s scales to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cic763

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

s scales

Buda, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Alice Meattey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Agmeattey

10/22/2015 04:45 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Alice Meattey

Dover, NH, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marie Ashworth to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marie.ashworth

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Marie Ashworth

Wilmington, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert J Roberts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rroberts91

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert J Roberts

Pittsburg, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thierry Hansard to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to harratkhaibar

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

Really? The petitioning chairmen of FEC are not citizens but corporations are? Are you kidding me?! How ludicrous! Can the other chairmen get any more arrogant and demagogic? How irresponsible, how criminal in their intent to subvert the spirit of the law they have been assigned to administer! The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thierry Hansard

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Andrew Weyenberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Atweyenberg

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Andrew Weyenberg

Solon, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
DANIEL FAISAL to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to argencor

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

DANIEL FAISAL

Hinsdale, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dan Dailey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nand.dan

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dan Dailey

Greeley, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Megan and Douglas Roberts to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to droberts

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Megan and Douglas Roberts

Waterloo, ON

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Toby Dolinka to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tobykatlover38

10/22/2015 04:46 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Toby Dolinka

Grand Rapids, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gene Polito to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gendavideo

10/22/2015 04:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gene Polito

Sag Harbor, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Jeffrey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rj20607

10/22/2015 04:47 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Jeffrey

Fort Myers, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Heath Post to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dragonlinch666

10/22/2015 04:47 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Heath Post

Lansing, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Elizabeth Wood to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to etwood459

10/22/2015 04:47 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Wood

Gettysburg, Pa, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joanne Snyder to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to 2dancingcats

10/22/2015 04:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joanne Snyder

San Diego, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patricia McGavran to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to patricia.k.mcgavran

10/22/2015 04:47 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia McGavran

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bryan Haynes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bbbryny

10/22/2015 04:47 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bryan Haynes

Bronx, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Klein to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mjklein3

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Klein

Akron, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joni Listerman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to superfrog22

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joni Listerman

Lawrence, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Patricia Richard-Amato to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to prichardamato

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Richard-Amato

Duluth, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Maxine Hayes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hayesmaxine95

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Maxine Hayes

New Milford, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michelle Krupkin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mkrupkin

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michelle Krupkin

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Charles Fowler to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cfowler5245

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Charles Fowler

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sandy Hess to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Sandymhess

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sandy Hess

Santa Barbara, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Melody Jenkins to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sayifoundit

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Melody Jenkins

Olathe, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nina Ortiz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nina_the_writer

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nina Ortiz

Bronx, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
R Richard Roe to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to r.roe

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

R Richard Roe

Palo Alto, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gary Kolasa to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to garykolasa

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gary Kolasa

Woodhaven, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chuck Donegan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to chucknet

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Chuck Donegan

Yonkers, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Patrick Eggleston to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to eggleston4444

10/22/2015 04:48 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patrick Eggleston

Amherst, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gordon ILLG to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cathy.gordon.illg

10/22/2015 04:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gordon ILLG

Lakewood, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Murray Stein to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mas2

10/22/2015 04:49 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Murray Stein

Shaker Heights, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nicholas Diamond to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to nick4122010

10/22/2015 04:49 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nicholas Diamond

White Oak, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Vera Cousins to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Vcousins903

10/22/2015 04:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Vera Cousins

Grinnell, IA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Olivia Eielson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to olivia2

10/22/2015 04:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Olivia Eielson

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Carper to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rcarper

10/22/2015 04:49 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Carper

Conifer, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Bristow to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mf57902

10/22/2015 04:49 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mary Bristow

Brentwood, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

david hershenzona to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to crocket 123

10/22/2015 04:50 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

david hershenzona

verona, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gay Goden to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to maxibemis

10/22/2015 04:50 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gay Goden

Euclid, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Loan Tran to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Enzielle

10/22/2015 04:50 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Loan Tran

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William O'Rourke to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to orourkewa

10/22/2015 04:50 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

William O'Rourke

Xenia, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Sidofsky to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to fsds

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carol Sidofsky

Winter Park, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Truong to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rqtruong

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Richard Truong

Irvine, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
sam eisenbach to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to salmonsoup

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

sam eisenbach

mecosta, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Anne Handley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to handleyanne

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Anne Handley

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Jones to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to catslady3

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Linda Jones

Ontario, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
a p koedt to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ketsie

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

a p koedt

new york, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Paula Mackrow to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wildwood

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Paula Mackrow

Carlton, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Wendy Fast to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to touch22

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Wendy Fast

Dansville, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Letsch to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bjletsch

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Barbara Letsch

Lantana, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Milton Carrigan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mecarrigan

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Milton Carrigan

San Luis Obispo, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Phyllis Booth to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to olymama3736

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Phyllis Booth

Olympia, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Karen Caspers-Curl to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kcdcweld

10/22/2015 04:51 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Karen Caspers-Curl

Naselle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marilyn Weirich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marilynweirich

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marilyn Weirich

Richmond, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marilyn Weirich to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to marilynweirich

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marilyn Weirich

Richmond, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Burton Welte to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to burtwelte

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Burton Welte

new york, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mimi Sobel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Mimmarsob

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mimi Sobel

Beachwood, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ken Marion to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kenlola

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ken Marion

Tampa, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Kitson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kitson.thomas

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Kitson

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Bob and Carmen Riggs to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bobcarmenriggs

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bob and Carmen Riggs

Bethlehem, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pat Wingate to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to xanthusunicorn

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pat Wingate

Tatum, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Stephanie Heyer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sheyer

10/22/2015 04:52 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Stephanie Heyer

Long Beach, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
M Moore to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to margaretmooresvc

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

M Moore

Bend, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Robinson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to robinsjm

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

John Robinson

Tolland, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Patricia Robertson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to topatr

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Patricia Robertson

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Meyer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to davidmeyer417

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Meyer

Joplin, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy Berman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to robinsgaia

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy Berman

Kensington, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

David Armstrong to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to djstrongarm

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Armstrong

Lomita, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Geraldine Misiewicz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to edgerrie

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Geraldine Misiewicz

Sayreville, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Owen Eager to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to omeager

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Owen Eager

Lawrence, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynn Ketchum to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 5foot2

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lynn Ketchum

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Campbell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to SusanCFP

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Campbell

The Villages, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Simon to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mary.j.simon

10/22/2015 04:53 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Mary Simon

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Matt Johansen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mdjohansen.mj

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Matt Johansen

Cocoa Beach, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Suzanne Moschini to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to szmsept

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Suzanne Moschini

Bath, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
JAMES HANSEN to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to JBOY2010

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

JAMES HANSEN

SPRING VALLEY, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
DG Stave to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dgs 1950

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

DG Stave

minneapolis, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Marguerite Thibeau to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to mcthibeau

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marguerite Thibeau

Hudson, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Peter Donahoe to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pddcook

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Peter Donahoe

Honolulu, HI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Linda Reilly to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lindareilly

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Reilly

Olympia, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kenneth Wryn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kenwryn

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kenneth Wryn

Estacada, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Lampi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to politics

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Lampi

Bellevue, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Jane Patterson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jane

10/22/2015 04:54 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jane Patterson

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Wilson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rbrt1

10/22/2015 04:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Wilson

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
mike kaufman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mrmikek63

10/22/2015 04:55 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

mike kaufman

st.paul, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chris Scholl to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Christopherscholl 007

10/22/2015 04:55 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Chris Scholl

Neptune, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Claire Casey to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to casey.claire01

10/22/2015 04:55 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Claire Casey

Hailey, ID

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Rose to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to antaea

10/22/2015 04:55 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections. DO YOU REPRESENT THE PEOPLE OR THE CORPORATIONS???

Carol Rose

Ventura, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Reed to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to judyredhorn

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judith Reed

Keene, NH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Linda Humphrey to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to sunbirdlinda

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Humphrey

Grapeview, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Campbell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to camp2513bell

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Campbell

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Christine Morrissey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to merryminion

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Christine Morrissey

Appleton, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Clark Bergman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to clark.bergman

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Clark Bergman

Fridley, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard McGrain to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rmcgrain

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard McGrain

Charlottesville, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sammy Bryan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sammy_bryan

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sammy Bryan

Denton, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Eleanor Smithwick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pacmail

10/22/2015 04:56 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Eleanor Smithwick

Atlanta, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judith Wands to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to judiwands

10/22/2015 04:57 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Judith Wands

NYC, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

James Seamans to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to leoraven99

10/22/2015 04:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Seamans

Cortland, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Merle Cosgrove to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to merlecosgrove

10/22/2015 04:57 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Merle Cosgrove

Mount Tremper, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
L. Finn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to finn.lisa

10/22/2015 04:57 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

L. Finn

Phoenix, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Arthur Smaragdas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ajsmar1

10/22/2015 04:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Arthur Smaragdas

Oceanside, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Terry Campbell to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to zarooko

10/22/2015 04:57 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Terry Campbell

Sacramento, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Eastman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ocean2trail

10/22/2015 04:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Eastman

Costa Mesa, CA, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Trevor Robinson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to trevor

10/22/2015 04:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Trevor Robinson

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nishant Patel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nishant.patelg

10/22/2015 04:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Nishant Patel

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Hurley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hurld55

10/22/2015 04:58 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Hurley

Bel Air, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dale Farmer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Farmerd52

10/22/2015 04:58 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dale Farmer

Moline, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Vernon Hill to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to v.h.hill123

10/22/2015 04:58 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Vernon Hill

New Brighton, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Leslie Sanders to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to justice.lms

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Leslie Sanders

Bay City, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carolanne Wright to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to carolanne.wright

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carolanne Wright

Whitefish, MT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cynthia Call to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cynthia.call23

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cynthia Call

Melbourne, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Panella to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to chpanella

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carol Panella

Florence, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Siobhan Ulreich-Power to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ulreich-power

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Siobhan Ulreich-Power

Scottsdale, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Eric Ferris to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Ferris.eric

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Eric Ferris

chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Deborah Cheek to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dcanddc

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

These commonsense reforms enjoy broad bipartisan support among the American public. But the refusal by any of the FEC's three Republican commissioners to join with the FEC's three Democratic commissioners in supporting even modest reforms to address Citizens United has left the agency in nearly permanent gridlock.

It is time for the FEC to do its job.

Deborah Cheek

Mount Morris, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Berkeley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to carolberkeley

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carol Berkeley

Boxford, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
andrea bounds to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to babydoll 19

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

andrea bounds

roswell, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Prete to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mr.michaelprete

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Prete

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Malia Heckathorn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to maliaheckathorn

10/22/2015 04:59 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Malia Heckathorn

Peoria, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Rood to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wjrood

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

Why are there no representatives of independents or 3rd parties on the FEC?
I'm certain they would vote to consider the petition.

William Rood

Rochester, MN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Roy Gibson III to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to captroygibson

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Roy Gibson III

Saint Petersburg, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nancy O'Hagan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nancysusie.ohagan

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nancy O'Hagan

Portland, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Malia Heckathorn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to maliaheckathorn

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Malia Heckathorn

Peoria, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marjorie Johnson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mcjnyed

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marjorie Johnson

Plainview, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Foster to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to foster5652

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

We don't need stricter rules between candidates and Super PACs? Who could possibly look at the state of elections today and come away with that conclusion. Well, I know who. Anyone that believes the current system helps them. How sad that it's not about what's appropriate and right (the most power to the most people). But, it's about, as usual, what is politically advantageous.

Wonder why those congressional ratings are so low.

Richard Foster

Sour Lake, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michelle Lynes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Kitty 76

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michelle Lynes

New Douglas, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Francisco J. Velez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to javier3273_7

10/22/2015 05:00 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Francisco J. Velez

Bronx, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dory Stewart to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to writedocto

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dory Stewart

Creston, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Tamadhur Al-Aqeel to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tamadhur

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tamadhur Al-Aqeel

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

William Berninghausen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wgberninghausen

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Berninghausen

Gresham, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Hohn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mthohn

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Hohn

Ithaca, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gary Hiemke to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to ghiemke 1

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gary Hiemke

Round Rock, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Anne Lusby-Denham to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to anneunitypoet

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Anne Lusby-Denham

ROANOKE, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Claire Murray to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to clmurray 10

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Claire Murray

Ann Arbor, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kathryn Little to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kgtlittle

10/22/2015 05:01 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kathryn Little

Cleveland, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Chimis to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bobsee 149

10/22/2015 05:02 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Robert Chimis

Elmwood Park, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bonne Beavers to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to beaversbonne 10

10/22/2015 05:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bonne Beavers

San Lorenzo, NM

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Mick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to robertmick

10/22/2015 05:02 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Mick

Austin, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeremy Lyons to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jerbearl

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jeremy Lyons

West Hollywood, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Nicole Johnson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to pteryx

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nicole Johnson

Hillsboro, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Julie Kloper to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Jakloper

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Julie Kloper

Santa Clara, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Joshua Taylor to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to toasterrage

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Joshua Taylor

Tulsa, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Audrey Stein to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to aestein4

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Audrey Stein

Lisle, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Elizabeth Jackson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ejackson263

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Elizabeth Jackson

Elk Grove, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Peg & Larry Cole to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lcbuilder2c

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Peg & Larry Cole

phoenix, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Charles Leps to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lepsville

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Charles Leps

Olympia, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
M.R. Swenson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mswen

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs. FEC should not treat corporations as persons, and natural persons as not.

M.R. Swenson

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
M.R. Swenson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mswen

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs. FEC should not treat corporations as persons, and natural persons as not.

M.R. Swenson

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
M.R. Swenson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mswen

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs. FEC should not treat corporations as persons, and natural persons as not.

M.R. Swenson

Denver, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Volmar to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to volmars

10/22/2015 05:03 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Volmar

SANTA BARBARA, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Thomas Perez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to tomp

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Thomas Perez

Mims, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Christianne Schoedel to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kideyes42

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Christianne Schoedel

Baltimore, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Muriel Roberts to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to murielroberts 255

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Muriel Roberts

Pocatello ID 83201, ID

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sarah Bailey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to snbailey57

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sarah Bailey

San Leandro, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Walter Klockenbrink to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to analyticalman

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Walter Klockenbrink

Nixa, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Sandra Goodstone to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to SGoodstone

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sandra Goodstone

Millstone Twp, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chesly Zutaut to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cheszu

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Chesly Zutaut

Fayetteville, TN

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Clive Chafer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to clive

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Clive Chafer

Oakland, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Chad Hayes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to chayes58

10/22/2015 05:04 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Chad Hayes

Phila, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

ALVERA PRITCHARD to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to alvera99

10/22/2015 05:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

ALVERA PRITCHARD

MIAMI BEACH, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

ALVERA PRITCHARD to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to alvera99

10/22/2015 05:05 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

ALVERA PRITCHARD

MIAMI BEACH, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ann Bein to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to abein

10/22/2015 05:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ann Bein

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Kille to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jameskille

10/22/2015 05:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James Kille

Dallas, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Laura Barmack to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lbarmack

10/22/2015 05:05 PM

We are living in difficult times and the country is depending upon you to enforce our election laws -- what few we have left -- that are holding up the shreds of our Republic. Please defend that Republic. All Hell will break loose if you fail.

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Laura Barmack

Riverdale, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ann Wise to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to wise_ann

10/22/2015 05:05 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ann Wise

Chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Deborah Speckmann to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to daspeckmann

10/22/2015 05:05 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Deborah Speckmann

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

paul goldschmid to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to citizenbartle

10/22/2015 05:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

paul goldschmid

binghamton, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jennifer Brace to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to spiralight8

10/22/2015 05:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jennifer Brace

Palmdale, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Becky Daiss to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to beckydaiss

10/22/2015 05:06 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Becky Daiss

Arlington, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael Janover to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to janover

10/22/2015 05:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Janover

Eugene, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michael Janover to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to janover

10/22/2015 05:06 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Janover

Eugene, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jennifer Griffith to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jbgrijf

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jennifer Griffith

Durham, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Swanson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to swanson 71258

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Michael Swanson

Lancaster, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Judy Hoyle to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jalh2

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The METEORIC RISE AND HIGH PREVALENCE of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for FAR stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs.

The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent."

The FEC MUST enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Judy Hoyle

Cave Junction, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lori Berant to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to loriberant 1

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lori Berant

Milwaukie, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lori Berant to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to loriberant 1

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lori Berant

Milwaukie, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lori Berant to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to loriberant 1

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lori Berant

Milwaukie, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lorraine D. Johnson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lorraine.d.johnson

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lorraine D. Johnson

Seattle, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jan Hall to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to j29hall

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jan Hall

Worthington, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Linda Stelman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Lindastelman

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Stelman

Brunswick, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Linda Stelman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Lindastelman

10/22/2015 05:07 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Linda Stelman

Brunswick, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
J Hilton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hilton.jlynn

10/22/2015 05:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

J Hilton

Fuquay Varina, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Adriana Guidi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to koolkatstudio 34

10/22/2015 05:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Adriana Guidi

Sherman Oaks, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
liz Dyer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to melizabeth.dyer

10/22/2015 05:08 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

liz Dyer

Alexandria, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nathan Rice to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nathan.david.rice

10/22/2015 05:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

The status quo of current policy hasn't worked for the country yet, and a lack of respect for your fellow commissioners shows a lack of respect for cooperation amongst peers. Make no mistake, they are your peers and they have valid concerns. So too does the American public.

Nathan Rice

Ypsilanti, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Meredith Grosshandler to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to feline

10/22/2015 05:08 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Meredith Grosshandler

Albany, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ralph Sanders to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to treebear

10/22/2015 05:08 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ralph Sanders

Black Diamond, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gerald Masters to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to gmasters5

10/22/2015 05:08 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Gerald Masters

Brandon, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Richard Hammond to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dickdham

10/22/2015 05:09 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard Hammond

Mobile, AL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Olga Sevilla to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to limbed59453

10/22/2015 05:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Olga Sevilla

Canoga Park, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Olga Sevilla to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to limbed59453

10/22/2015 05:09 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Olga Sevilla

Canoga Park, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marvin Kummer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mjkkummer

10/22/2015 05:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marvin Kummer

Pittsville, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marvin Kummer to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mjkummer

10/22/2015 05:10 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marvin Kummer

Pittsville, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jeffrey White to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rogue576

10/22/2015 05:10 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

You need to end the corruption.

Jeffrey White

Forest Grove, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Maggie Haller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mhaller7

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Maggie Haller

Saint Louis, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Clelia Corona to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to clicorona

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Clelia Corona

Westminster,, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Dick Byrnes to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rdbc2

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Dick Byrnes

Greendale, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Scarpinatto to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tscarpinatto

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Scarpinatto

Portland, OR, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Scarpinatto to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tscarpinatto

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Scarpinatto

Portland, OR, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Scarpinatto to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tscarpinatto

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Scarpinatto

Portland, OR, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Scarpinatto to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tscarpinatto

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Scarpinatto

Portland, OR, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Thomas Scarpinatto to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to tscarpinatto

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Thomas Scarpinatto

Portland, OR, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Christine O'Brien to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Christiob

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Christine O'Brien

Peabody, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joe Detaranto to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to jdetaranto

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joe Detaranto

Rockaway, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Karen Hotchkiss to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to kindkare

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Karen Hotchkiss

Venice, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cecil Camune to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to camuhm

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cecil Camune

Heath, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
W Hall to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brazosit

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

W Hall

Zavalla, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Richardson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to thehandofzarquon

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Richardson

Tarrs, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Cecil Camune to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to camuhm

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Cecil Camune

Heath, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
sarosh patel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sapatel 1

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

sarosh patel

sunnyvale, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Frost to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jfrost7137

10/22/2015 05:11 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

James Frost

Overland Park, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Gotwald to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mgotwalddc

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Gotwald

Berkeley Springs, WV

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jennifer Everett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to hoppab 14

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Jennifer Everett

napa, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Erik Larue to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pacific2626

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Erik Larue

Burlington, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

joan armstrong to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to joanie.b.goode

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

joan armstrong

buffalo, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Lisa Thomas to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lrhody

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lisa Thomas

Issaquah, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Tatiana Durbak to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to durbakta

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Tatiana Durbak

Ewing, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Gary Andrew to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jeangary

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections. Are you a person?

Gary Andrew

Davidson, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sidney Lee to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lee_sidney

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sidney Lee

Natchitoches, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Fabrice Dupont to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mail

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Fabrice Dupont

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Shari Horne to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sharilhorne

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Shari Horne

Laguna Woods, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Agneza Roberson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to agneza_bozic

10/22/2015 05:12 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Agneza Roberson

Lake Worth, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

jane reilly to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mjtr

10/22/2015 05:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

jane reilly

north kingstown, RI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Charles Gadway to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rdgadway

10/22/2015 05:13 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Charles Gadway

White Salmon, WA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Melissa Nece to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mmnece

10/22/2015 05:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Melissa Nece

Palm Harbor, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Geraldine Thompson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to funfamily

10/22/2015 05:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Could you possible be more dishonest?!!!!

Geraldine Thompson

San Jose, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Catherine Cliffe to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to seedling

10/22/2015 05:13 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Catherine Cliffe

River Falls, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Joan Ogden to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ogdenj9

10/22/2015 05:13 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Joan Ogden

New York, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
DOUG SLACK to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to douglack1948

10/22/2015 05:14 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

DOUG SLACK

Green Oaks, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Caulean Vesey to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to caulean203

10/22/2015 05:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Caulean Vesey

Morehead City, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Ashley Sinohui-Lara to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cranbury20

10/22/2015 05:14 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Ashley Sinohui-Lara

Norwalk, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Katherine White to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kcwd50

10/22/2015 05:14 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Katherine White

Derwood, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04
James Stone to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to choice

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

James Stone

Santa Rosa Beach, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Mary Jones to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Vinmarjones 77

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mary Jones

Mequon, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Matt Carroll to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Matthew.carroll.86

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Matt Carroll

San Francisco, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kenneth Ahlberg to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ahlberg2

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kenneth Ahlberg

Turtle Lake, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gloria Love to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Love_gloria

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs. This becomes increasingly relevant with trade negotiations such as the TPP.

I am a person,

Gloria Love

Central, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gloria Love to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Love_gloria

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs. This becomes increasingly relevant with trade negotiations such as the TPP.

I am a person,

Gloria Love

Central, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Deborah Cate to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dfcate

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Deborah Cate

Philadelphia, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rosemarie Cohn to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rosemarieanddavid

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rosemarie Cohn

LaGUNA hILLS, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Karl L Konnerth to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to karlbon

10/22/2015 05:15 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Karl L Konnerth

Putnam Valley, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sharon Forster to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sforster07

10/22/2015 05:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Sharon Forster

Urbana, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ellen Evans to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to elliepirelli 57

10/22/2015 05:16 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ellen Evans

Atascadero, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Fink to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to datacat

10/22/2015 05:16 PM

Turning on a light on the always makes the cockroaches run.

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Fink

Los Angeles, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carrie Hagan to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to csh

10/22/2015 05:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Carrie Hagan

Pittsburgh, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Brady Watson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Brady.watson22

10/22/2015 05:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Brady Watson

Ralston, NE

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Douglas Wenny to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to douglas.wenny

10/22/2015 05:16 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Douglas Wenny

Wilmington, DE

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Len Hearne to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to hearneI

10/22/2015 05:16 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Len Hearne

Columbia, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Katrina Shadix to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Treehugger52768

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Katrina Shadix

Oviedo, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
John Fralick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to greybeard 1952

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

John Fralick

Columbus, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Rosemary Shaw to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to lucygrommit

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Rosemary Shaw

Concord, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sharon Russick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to vegansharon

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sharon Russick

Deerfield Beach, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ed Miller to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to emiller2

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ed Miller

Albany, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jane Jiumaleh to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jkjiumaleh

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jane Jiumaleh

Madison, WI

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Adam Nazimowitz to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to anazimowitz

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Adam Nazimowitz

Merrick, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Kathryn LeMosy to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to klemosy

10/22/2015 05:17 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Kathryn LeMosy

Paris, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carl Barnhart to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cfbarnhart

10/22/2015 05:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Carl Barnhart

Bend, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sheila Bukowski to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to srbukowski

10/22/2015 05:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sheila Bukowski

Kennebunk, ME

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Susan Bassett to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sueb 143

10/22/2015 05:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Susan Bassett

Flagstaff, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Carol Larson to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to c_larson

10/22/2015 05:18 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Carol Larson

Glencoe, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Mary Townsend to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mtfreddie91

10/22/2015 05:18 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Mary Townsend

Muskegon, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Barbara Doucet to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to 1celticwomyn

10/22/2015 05:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Doucet

Newnan, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Beverly Werkheiser to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to b.werkheiser45

10/22/2015 05:18 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Beverly Werkheiser

Catasauqua, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
walter denton to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to wjd2012

10/22/2015 05:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

walter denton

nineveh, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lydia LaFleur to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lmlafleur99

10/22/2015 05:19 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Lydia LaFleur

Chicopee, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Dale Tullier to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to dale4bpc

10/22/2015 05:19 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Dale Tullier

Denham Springs, LA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Chelsea Swick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to pinkcatmints

10/22/2015 05:19 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Chelsea Swick

Bayside, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Greg Bunker to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to greglbunker

10/22/2015 05:19 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Greg Bunker

Brighton, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Kimberley Shore to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kimalah 1

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Kimberley Shore

Brookhaven, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nils Bruzelius to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to nils.bruzelius

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nils Bruzelius

Westport Point, MA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Barbara Consbruck to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to bconsbruck

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Barbara Consbruck

Sylmar, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Alexa Ankele to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to alexa.ankele

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Alexa Ankele

Aurora, CO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Ginger Pierce to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ginger_pierce

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Ginger Pierce

Beaverton, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Carol Dodson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cdodson 7

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Our democracy is being sold out to the highest bidder--and apparently you don't care!

Carol Dodson

Elgin, SC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Caolan Eder to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ceder26

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Caolan Eder

Vienna, VA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rose Bevington to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rosefrank77

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rose Bevington

Ellenboro, NC

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Bonnie Probst to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Beprobst

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Bonnie Probst

Monrovia, MD

Comment re: REG 2015-04

H. Dennis Shumaker to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to hdshumaker

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

H. Dennis Shumaker

Marietta, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Robert Owens to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rjowens

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Robert Owens

Patchogue, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Pippa Pearthree to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ppearthree

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Pippa Pearthree

Brooklyn, NY

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Annamay Waldman to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to gatortraceramw

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Annamay Waldman

Ft.Pierce, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Rita Pitkin to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ritapitkin

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Rita Pitkin

Albany, VT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Gig Claire to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ggclaire

10/22/2015 05:20 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Gig Claire

chicago, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
mark cohen to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to markd.cohen

10/22/2015 05:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

mark cohen

amesville, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
William Cline to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to cline

10/22/2015 05:21 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

William Cline

Strongsville, OH

Comment re: REG 2015-04
SHARRI HARWICK to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to haRwick.s

10/22/2015 05:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

SHARRI HARWICK

Shawnee, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
SHARRI HARWICK to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to haRwick.s

10/22/2015 05:21 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

SHARRI HARWICK

Shawnee, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lauren Tucker to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rentheshagster9

10/22/2015 05:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lauren Tucker

Tallahassee, FL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
David Patrick to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Tymphony

10/22/2015 05:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

David Patrick

Raleigh, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Franz to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to mikefranz 1850

10/22/2015 05:21 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

People are people, corporations are not!

Michael Franz

Grand Rapids, MI

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Leigh Hill to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to leighsure

10/22/2015 05:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Leigh Hill

Felton, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

saul sanchez to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to sanhome 1

10/22/2015 05:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

saul sanchez

cedar hill, TX

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Lynn Franks to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to laf32

10/22/2015 05:22 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Lynn Franks

Sacramento, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Jonathon Ray to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to jonathonray

10/22/2015 05:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Jonathon Ray

Glendale, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Marie Oliver to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to Moliver09

10/22/2015 05:22 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Marie Oliver

North Haledon, NJ

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Nick Troisi to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to ntroisi 1

10/22/2015 05:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Nick Troisi

Unityville, PA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Michael Spratley to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to michaelsspratley

10/22/2015 05:22 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michael Spratley

Park Ridge, IL

Comment re: REG 2015-04
john fankhauser to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to john.fankhauser

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

john fankhauser

monroe, GA

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Michele S Ohmes to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to michele

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Michele S Ohmes

Kansas City, MO

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Sue Wiedemann to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to msw1204

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Sue Wiedemann

Broken Arrow, OK

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Darlene Norwood to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to darlenenorwood

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Darlene Norwood

Fairfield, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Billy LeBlanc to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to bleblanc 1971

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Furthermore, the commissioners who first rejected the petition brought by commissioners Ravel and Weintraub because apparently these two are not real people should resign from their post. You have no interest in doing their job responsibly or doing what's best for working Americans. This continued behavior of hiding things or delaying commensence petitions that are good for the election process is quite disturbing to working class Americans! You must cease and desist!

Billy LeBlanc

St. Albans, VT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Larry Le Starge to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to lestargelj

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Larry Le Starge

Overland Park, KS

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Karynn Merkel to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to kelymn2001

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Karynn Merkel

Eureka, CA

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Richard Koda to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to rjkoda

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The prevalence of super PACs that devote their resources solely to electing a single candidate - not to mention the close personal, professional and fundraising ties between many candidates and staff of super PACs that support them - show the need for stricter rules against coordination between candidates and super PACs. The law and courts say these entities are supposed to be "truly independent." The FEC should enforce this law. The FEC should also require disclosure of political spending and close loopholes that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Richard Koda

Ridgefield, CT

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Brian Freeman to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to brianjfreeman

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Brian Freeman

Gresham, OR

Comment re: REG 2015-04
Diane Wilson to: IndependentSpending
Please respond to dlswilson57

10/22/2015 05:23 PM

The public should know which corporations, groups or wealthy individuals are behind the campaign ads that try to influence their votes. The current lack of full public information on campaign spending is almost entirely because of the FEC's weak disclosure rules. The FEC should restore its previous, commonsense disclosure rules so that corporations, billionaires and other powerful interests cannot conceal their identities from the public while trying to influence the people's votes. The FEC should also close loopholes that allow candidates to circumvent rules against coordination with super PACs and that allow foreign money to influence U.S. elections.

Diane Wilson

Tucson, AZ

Comment re: REG 2015-04

Charlotte Gillespie to: IndependentSpending

Please respond to charlottegillespie 41

10/22/2015 05:24 PM

The Citizens United ruling has made it more difficult than ever to stop foreign money from influencing U.S. elections. The possibility of foreign money flowing through groups that do not disclose the sources of their funds makes this issue especially urgent, considering the international scope of many electioneering groups. The FEC should strengthen the rules against foreign nationals injecting money into U.S. elections, and it should also require full disclosure of political spending and prevent candidates from coordinating with super PACs.

Charlotte Gillespie

Penn Yan, NY