Re: Supplementary Testimony

Dear Mr. Norton:

On behalf of the Association of State Democratic Chairs, I want to thank the Commission for the opportunity to testify at its hearing on August 4th regarding the definition of federal election activity and state party allocation of salaries. The regulations that the Commission ultimately adopts on these subjects will have a direct and substantial impact on state and local political party committees.

Because of the major impact these regulations will have, I would like to request that the Commission extend the period from seven days to thirty days in which testimony can be supplemented. I would also like to extend an invitation to the Commission to attend and to take testimony from additional state party representatives at the next meeting of the ASDC. Any new regulations adopted by the Commission should be informed by state party experience with the law. The Commission should be aware of the financial costs and operational consequences of the regulatory choices that it will be making.

When the regulations now being reconsidered were first adopted, the Commission was acting under a rigid statutory deadline to complete the rulemaking. As a result, the Commission was unable to undertake an extensive factual inquiry into the consequences of its proposed rules. The Commission now has that opportunity. By conducting a fuller investigation prior to promulgating new regulations, the Commission can assure that the administrative record well supports its regulatory decisions. Absent such inquiry, the Commission runs the risk of the promulgating regulations that are deficient for the same reasons that its present regulations were found legally wanting by the District Court in Shays v. Federal Election Commission.

The Commission's consideration of this request is appreciated.

Very truly yours,

Mark Brewer

Information Submitted by Chairman Thomas for the Record in FEC Rulemaking on Definitions of Terms Explaining Coverage of “Federal Election Activity”

August 8, 2005

One of the assumptions underlying some comments or testimony received is that the state and local parties are suffering under BCRA. While some party activists may be frustrated by the new law’s added requirements, comparisons of 2000 cycle and 2004 cycle financial activity don’t seem to support the view that the law is in fact constraining party efforts. I have focused on Democratic party activity, and in particular on MI Democratic party activity, since our sole witness associated with a state party was from MI.

In overall terms, in the 2000 cycle Democratic state and local parties reported about $140 million in federal disbursements. In the 2004 cycle they increased that amount by almost $14 million to a total of about $153.7 million. (Incidentally, Republican state and local parties showed almost no change in overall federal disbursements, going from about $165.8 million in the 2000 cycle to about $164.1 million in the 2004 cycle.) FEC Press Release, Party Financial Activity, March 2, 2005, p.5 (Attachment 1).

Similarly, in its recent report, the Center for Public Integrity (CPI) reviewed overall receipts of state parties (Republican plus Democratic; federal plus nonfederal). CPI noted that state parties took in $65 million less in the 2004 cycle than in the 2000 cycle, but once the reduction in transfers from national parties was taken into account (about $303 million less in 2004), the state parties themselves had indeed raised $128 million more in the 2004 cycle than in the 2000 cycle. See “McCain-Feingold Changes State Party Spending,” May 26, 2005, <http://www.publicintegrity.org/partylines/report.aspx?aid=690&sid=300> (Attachment 2); FEC Press Release, Party Financial Activity, May 15, 2001, pp. 8, 9 (Attachment 3); FEC Press Release, Party Financial Activity, March 2, 2005, p. 21 (Attachment 1).

Looking just at Michigan, the State Democratic Party reported spending about $10.7 million for federal activity in the 2000 cycle, but increased to a level of about $13.8 million in the 2004 cycle. FEC Press Release, Party Financial Activity, Mar. 2, 2005, p. 22 (Attachment 1).

24 federally registered local Democratic parties in MI reported a total of about $3 million (federal disbursements plus the nonfederal share of allocable activity) during the 2000 cycle, but 34 (10 more) federally registered Democratic local parties in MI reported a total of about $5.8 million (almost twice as much) during the 2004 cycle. Spreadsheet from FEC Database Showing MI Local Party Spending (Attachment 4).

The CPI report, supra (Attachment 2), which adds both federal and nonfederal activity for Republicans and Democrats, shows that MI parties raised about $28 million for the 2002 cycle, but increased receipts to about $35 million in the post-BCRA 2004 cycle. (An effort to compare the 2000 cycle combined Republican and Democratic federal and nonfederal activity in MI with the 2004 activity suggests there was a drop-off. The Michigan Campaign Finance Network's "Citizen's Guide to Michigan Campaign Finance," pp. 12-13 (Attachment 5) indicates—after netting out intra-committee allocation transfers and national party soft money—that about $7 million more was raised by MI party committees in the 2000 cycle than in the 2004 cycle. The Democratic party committees, though, increased their receipts by about $2 million in the 2004 cycle, whereas the Republican party committees decreased their receipts by about $9 million. (Attachment 2.)

It would be particularly helpful to assess whether VR, Voter ID (VID), and GOTV were constrained by the BCRA rules. One might first look at reported allocable party activity. It is apparent that federally reported allocable activity for Democratic state parties has gone down dramatically. Whereas the 2000 cycle showed a total of about $264 million, the 2004 cycle showed a total of only about $59 million. Spreadsheet from FEC Database Showing Democratic State Party Allocation and Other Federal Spending (Attachment 6). Since most VR, VID, and GOTV would have been shown in this category in the 2000 cycle, this, at first blush, suggests a drop-off in such activity. But even this evidence may not show a withering of these functions:

First, the bulk of this reduction can be attributed to the fact that the practice of transferring funds from the national party committees to Democratic state parties to pay for allocable 'issue ads' mentioning federal candidates has been largely eliminated by BCRA. (In the 2000 cycle, national party soft money transfers to Democratic state and local parties totaled about $135.8 million, but in the 2004 cycle, after BCRA, there was none of this transfer activity. Meanwhile, the hard money transfers from Democratic national parties to state and local parties also went down, though less dramatically, from $77.6 million in the 2000 cycle, to about $66 million in the 2004 cycle. FEC Press Release, Party Financial Activity, May 15, 2001, pp. 8, 9 (Attachment 3); FEC Press Release, Party Financial Activity, March 2, 2005, p. 21 (Attachment 1).) The $147.4 million decrease in national party transfers probably corresponds to the changed practice regarding 'issue ads,' and accounts for most of the drop-off in allocable activity at the state party level.

Second, after BCRA, most state party VR, VID, and GOTV is reported in a different category for Federal Election Activity (FEA). As Attachment 6 shows, while allocable activity of Democratic state parties was declining, other federal spending was increasing. This latter category went from $34.7 million in the 2000 cycle to about $139.5 million in the 2004 cycle.

Focusing on the MI State Democratic Party, our FEC Database shows that in the 2000 cycle, about $8 million ($5 million soft; $3 million hard) can be identified as non-advertising in the allocable activity category. See Attachment 7. Some of this would have been for administrative expenses, so it is impossible to know how much of this amount was spent for VR, VID, and GOTV. By comparison, in the 2004 cycle, the MI State Democratic Party reported about $4.8 million in FEA. Id. At least we know this would not have included administrative expenses. Thus, although there may have been some drop-off in VR, VID, and GOTV, it probably was not dramatic.

Ultimately, it is difficult to pinpoint how much VR, VID, and GOTV (i.e., activity other than 'issue ads') the state parties undertook in 2000 and whether such capability declined in relative terms in the 2004 cycle. However, the CFI report, supra, analyzed this activity at the state party level in the 2002 election cycle and compared the 2004 cycle. It indicates that spending for such activity (Republican plus Democratic; federal plus nonfederal) went up from $44.1 million in the 2002 cycle (pre BCRA) to $71.4 million in the 2004 cycle.

In sum, the foregoing research suggests that, by most measurements, state and local party campaign finance has not been inhibited by BCRA. It suggests that such committees have adapted well to the need to raise federally permissible funds. While there certainly is continued resistance to the legal and accounting rules, the need to adapt has taken hold and funds appear to have been plentiful.

PARTY FINANCIAL ACTIVITY SUMMARIZED FOR THE 2004 ELECTION CYCLE

WASHINGTON – Federal committees of the two major parties raised nearly $1.5 billion and spent $1.41 billion between January 1, 2003, and December 31, 2004, according to a Federal Election Commission (FEC) compilation of information from reports submitted by party committees at the national, state, and local levels.

Republican national, state, and local committees who report to the FEC raised $784.8 million during 2003-2004 in federally permissible “hard money.” Democratic committees raised $683.8 million. Democratic party receipts were more than 89% higher than in the comparable period during the 2000 presidential campaign, while Republican party fundraising grew by 46% when compared with the same period. Overall, these hard money totals for both parties’ national committees were greater than their combined hard and soft money raised in any prior campaign.

The 2004 election cycle is the first in which national parties have been prohibited from receiving “soft money” as a result of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (BCRA). While the Democratic National Committee (DNC) and Republican National Committee (RNC) raised substantially more this cycle than before, even counting soft money, both parties’ Senatorial and Congressional committees raised less in 2004 than they had in previous cycles. The following table shows “hard money” fundraising compared with both hard and soft money receipts in previous cycles.

National Party Fundraising

(Millions of Dollars)

Spending directly in support of federal candidates has also increased substantially in 2004. Democratic party committees reported a total of $176.5 million in independent expenditures, which advocate the election of specific candidates but are not coordinated with campaigns. Of this amount, the DNC alone reported independent expenditures of $120.3 million on presidential candidates. In addition, Democratic committees spent a total of $33.1 million in coordinated expenditures on behalf of general election candidates. Unlike independent expenditures, the law imposes limits on this spending for each candidate. Republican party committees reported $88 million in independent expenditures and $32.4 million in coordinated expenditures. Spending on these activities had declined during the period when soft money activity was increasing for the parties. In addition, while the RNC reported making $18.3 million in independent expenditures, they also reported $45.8 million in "generic media expenses," ads in which they shared the costs with Bush-Cheney '04. The DNC spent an additional $24 million during the general election period for media production and consulting not included in the independent expenditure totals.

Sources of receipts for national party committees are examined in more detail in tables attached to this release. These tables show that all national committees substantially increased their contributions from individuals and also the financial support they received from federal candidates. Particularly noteworthy were the large transfers the DNC and RNC received from their Presidential nominees during the final weeks of the campaign, along with the number and size of transfers from members of Congress to their respective party campaign committees. These are listed in separate tables for each party recipient.

The breakdown of individual contributions by size shows that while proceeds from small unitemized contributions grew considerably for each committee, they made up a smaller proportion of all contributions than in earlier cycles. Contributions of the maximum amount, on the other hand, made up a greater proportion of contributions than previously for each national committee. This limit was changed in BCRA from $20,000 per year to $25,000 per year for each individual.

BCRA also limited the role of soft money in the financing of state and local party activity in the 2004 cycle. This release includes tables listing state committees of the two major parties, along with their federal (hard money) spending and the soft money share of any allocated spending for the past three election cycles. The tables show overall increases in hard money spending offset by greater declines in soft money allocated spending by these committees in 2004.

Tables in this release also provide financial overviews for national and state/local committees of the two major parties. Transfers from national to state parties are listed by state. Finally, direct party involvement in congressional campaigns is tallied for each candidate in the general election.

McCain-Feingold Changes State Party Spending
Fundraising dips, ad buys plummet in first election after campaign reform

By Agustin Armendariz and Aron Pilhofer

WASHINGTON, May 26, 2005 — Campaign finance reform took a bite out of the bottom line for state parties in 2004 as overall fundraising dipped to slightly more than $735 million for the cycle, with an even split between Democrats and Republicans.

That is $65 million less than state parties pulled in during the 2000 presidential election and an $85 million decline from the 2002 mid-term elections, a Center for Public Integrity analysis of state and federal campaign finance reports shows.

The downturn is largely attributable to the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act, also known as McCain-Feingold, which outlawed "soft money"—the unlimited, mostly unregulated campaign cash donated to national party committees by individuals, corporations and unions.

In elections before the reforms were enacted, large transfers from the "big six" Democratic and Republican national committees—most of it soft money—accounted for about 40 percent of all the money coming into state party coffers. Much of that money was funneled into broadcast advertisements. In 2004, with the law in place, the national parties transferred no soft money to their state counterparts.

Consequently, state parties on both sides of the aisle reported spending far less on television and radio advertising than before the law took effect in November 2002, according to the Center's six-year study. Also, state parties retooled their operations to focus more on direct voter contact.

The Center tracked contributions and expenditures for more than 200 state party and caucus committees over the three election cycles, making it possible to evaluate the impact of the McCain-Feingold legislation after the first full cycle under the new law. Because federal candidates appear on ballots alongside state-level candidates in the same election, state parties must conform to both state and federal regulations, usually by operating two different bank accounts: one federal and one state. The Center study includes both.

Throughout the course of this study, Center researchers ran across numerous reporting problems stemming from this complicated regulatory environment. Federal receipts and expenditures often appeared on state filings, and even federal transfers from the national parties to state committees did not balance on each side of the ledger. Center researchers spent months working to reconcile the discrepancies among various official filings and reduce duplication.

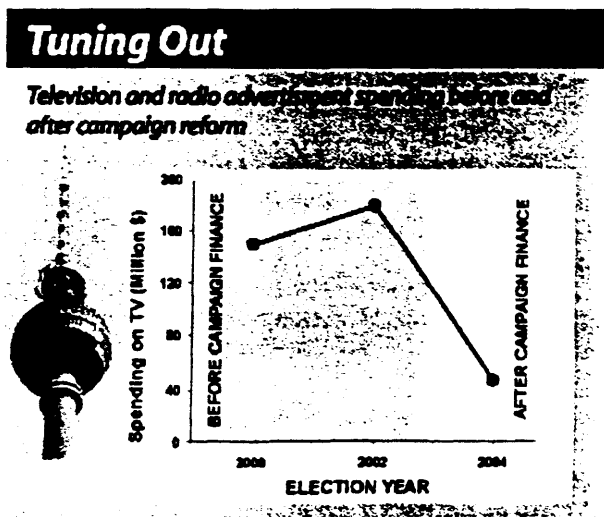

Radio silence

One of the major findings of the Center's analysis: state parties drastically reduced their investment in political advertising after the McCain-Feingold legislation eliminated transfers of soft money from the national committees to their state affiliates.

Television and radio ad buys declined from $180 million in the 2002 elections to $49 million—a drop of $133 million, or 74 percent.

During the 2000 and 2002 cycles, the national parties raised close to a billion dollars in soft money. They transferred significant amounts of that money to state affiliates, and the state parties in turn invested heavily in advertising on behalf of the national committees.

For example, during the 2002 election cycle state Democrats paid Media Strategies & Research $22 million for media consulting services, production and ad buys. In the 2004 cycle that amount dropped to $6 million.

Jon Hutchens, president of Media Strategies & Research, attributes the decline in media expenditures by state parties to the absence of soft money transfers from the national parties. The federal committees would "route these funds through a state party committee in order to pay for the advertising the federal committees wanted," he said.

But not anymore. Under the old rules, the national parties could finance political advertisements with a larger portion of soft money by using their state affiliates to finance ad buys. With the elimination of soft money, this is no longer an option.

While the role state parties played in media buys declined, "BCRA didn't reduce the amount of spending in media," said John Gautier, president of TenCapitol—a GOP media consulting firm formerly known as Murphy Pintak Gautier Hudome.

Though his firm received slightly more than $100,000 from Republican state parties in the 2004 cycle—down from $17 million in the 2002 cycle—Gautier suggested that media buys of 527 and 501(c)(4) non-profit organizations probably made up the difference.

In fact, a Center study released last year found that, during the 2004 presidential election, 527s spent a majority of their money on broadcast advertising. These committees accounted for more than $140 million in political advertising, an amount comparable to the gap left by state parties.

Some soft money donations previously given to the national parties may have shifted to the 527 committees that were so controversial last election. Media Strategies & Research is the top overall recipient of 527 money since 2000, and received more than $42 million from the Media Fund, which worked in conjunction with America Coming Together, during the 2004 election cycle. Operating outside of most state and federal election laws, 527 groups can carry out some of the activities that party committees may no longer engage in.

Still, according to some observers, advertising paid for by political non-profits did not simply replace the soft-money advertising of past elections. Rich Robinson of the non-partisan, non-profit Michigan Campaign Finance Network says that, in his state, "third-party groups sponsored only $3.5 million-worth out of $38 million spent for broadcast television advertising after the March Super Tuesday primaries." During the 2000 presidential election "national parties transferred more than $24 million in Foundation.

* Correction: When this report was embargoed for release on May 24, 2005, $850,000 of contributions to state party and caucus committees were misattributed to Richard (Dick) & Elisabeth (Betsy) DeVos, Jr. That money should have been attributed to Dick's father and mother, Richard (Rich) & Helen DeVos, Sr. The couples often report contributions originating from the same address.

Update: After publication of this report, the Florida Republican Party notified the Center that reports they had filed with the Florida secretary of state contained errors misattributing $500,000 in contributions from Richard DeVos, Sr., to his son Richard DeVos, Jr. The numbers in our database and the overall rankings have been updated to reflect this amendment by the party.

FEC REPORTS INCREASE IN PARTY FUNDRAISING FOR 2000

WASHINGTON - Both major political parties reported fundraising increases during the 1999-2000 election cycle when compared to the last Presidential election cycle of 1995-96, according to figures released by the Federal Election Commission. Republicans led with total receipts of $715.7 million in both hard and soft dollars, while the Democrats had total receipts of $520.4 million for the cycle. The following table provides a summary of overall party receipts reported to the FEC for the past five election cycles:

	1999-2000	1997-1998	1995-1996	1993-1994	1991-1992

*Includes only National Party Non-Federal funds.

For the period beginning January 1, 1999, through December 31, 2000, Republicans continued to raise and spend considerably more money than Democrats in federal (hard dollars), reporting receipts of $465.8 million and disbursements of $427 million by their national, state and local political party committees. This was a 12% increase in fundraising and a 4.5% increase in spending over the last Presidential election cycle for Republicans. National, state and local Democratic Party committees raised $275.2 million and spent $265.8 million, representing an increase of 24% in both federal receipts and disbursements.

Republican committees contributed $2.3 million directly to candidates and reported $29.6 million in coordinated expenditures* on behalf of candidates. Democratic committees contributed $1.4 million and reported $21 million in coordinated expenditures. Also, Republicans reported $1.6 million in independent expenditures for the 1999-2000 cycle, while Democrats spent $2.3 million.

The following chart provides a comparison of political party federal activity during the past 12 election cycles:

Democrats ended the 2000 election with cash-on-hand of $14.6 million and nearly $18 million in debts, while Republicans reported cash-on-hand of $33.1 million and $2.5 million in debts.

During the 2000 election cycle, both major parties raised record amounts of non-federal or "soft money." Republican national party committees raised $249.9 million in non-federal funds, up 81% from 1995-96, the last Presidential election cycle, while Democratic national party committees raised $245.2 million, up 98% from 1995-96. Non-federal money now makes up 47% of total receipts for Democrats and 35% for Republicans. Soft money is used to pay a portion of the overhead expenses of party organizations, as well as other shared expenses that benefit both federal and non-federal elections. In addition, it is used for issue advocacy, as well as generic party advertising. It may also be transferred from national committees to state and local party committees as well as being used to support construction and maintenance of party headquarters.

For the 1999-2000 election cycle, Republicans disbursed $252.8 million from their non-federal accounts. Of this amount, $129.9 million was transferred to state party committees, $12.8 was contributed to state and local candidates, while $70.4 was spent on joint federal/non-federal expenses and $48.1 was for other expenses. Democrats disbursed $244.9 million during the cycle, transferring $149.8 million to state parties, contributing $6.1 million to state and local candidates, spending $54.6 million on joint federal/non-federal activity, and using $46.1 million for other expenses.

Attached to this release are various charts, graphs and tables describing overall political party financial activities during the cycle:

- Statistical details of political party activity for election cycle 2000;
- Details of contributions and coordinated expenditures by candidate status, i.e. incumbent, challenger and open-seat;
- Comparable summary statistics for seven election cycles;
- Summary information on non-federal activity for 2000 and comparable figures for five election cycles;
- Transfers from the national committees' federal and non-federal accounts to each state;
- Party contributions, coordinated expenditures, and independent expenditures for each 2000 general election candidate.

This release and the data contained in it are also available on the FEC's webpage at www.fec.gov under News Releases or Campaign Finance Reports and Data.

*Coordinated expenditures are monies spent by national and state party committees on general election nominees and are in addition to contributions. They are limited in amount.

Michigan Political Parties

The federal McCain-Feingold reforms had a major effect on the way the state party committees conducted business in 2004 – particularly compared to the last presidential election year in 2000. Prior to the reforms, the federal party committees transferred vast sums of soft money to the state parties' state accounts to pay the nonfederal share of issue advertising supporting federal candidates. The convergence of hotly contested presidential, senatorial and congressional (8th District) campaigns led to massive transfers in 2000. Federal party committees sent the Michigan Republicans' state account $10.4 million, and federal committees sent the Michigan Democrats' state account $14.2 million. Large transfers like that didn't occur in 2004.

In 2004 the Michigan Republicans' state account topped the Democrats in total receipts - $6.3 million to $2.9 million. Just two west Michigan families provided most of the difference: the Prince/DeVos family gave $2.2 million and the Van Andels gave $1.1 million, combining for more than half the party's total receipts. State party chairwoman Betsy DeVos and her husband provided loans of $950,000 that were repaid during the election cycle.

Republican state candidates got a bigger collective boost from their party than Democrats thanks to their party's income advantage. After repaying the DeVos household for loans, the Republicans' direct expenditures topped the Democrats - $1.3 million to $400,000. Republican independent expenditures doubled Democrats - $1.3 million to $660,000.

Each party shows considerably more in receipts than expenditures in the state accounts - Republicans by $2.2 million and Democrats by

$1.1 million. That unaccounted difference could have been used for "non-election" activities like issue advertising.

The Michigan Democrats had a substantially larger federal account than the state Republicans this election cycle - $15.7 million to $8.2 million. This was the second consecutive election cycle where state Democrats had a wide advantage in federal accounts.

Top contributors to the parties' state accounts are displayed in Appendix G.

Subject Re: draft questions for tomorrow ☐

Just a couple of small random things . . .

--First, I notice that the schedule on the web replaces Mark Brewer with Karl Sandstrom -- but I got a call from a Michigan AP reporter today who thought Brewer was coming.

--The last paragraph on the first page (starting "On the other hand,") is a little odd. In 2000 you would say that administrative/generic allocation was where VR, VID, and GOTV appeared, but in 2004 it appears on line 30 (FEA). The Michigan Democratic state committee reported about $4.8 million in FEA using exclusively hard money (line 30b)

I looked at the specific H4's from 2000 for the Michigan state committee and excluding spending for "advertising" you get about $3 million federal and $5 million nonfederal for all other admin/generic activity that was allocated.

This makes it look like the kind of activity we're looking at now may have gone from about $8 million in 2000 (2/3 soft) to about $5 million in 2004 (all hard).

(There was about $6 million in federal and $10 million nonfederal spent on "advertising" in 2000)

-- In the second paragraph on page 2 you refer to CFI - do you mean CPI?
