REG 2011-02 Internet Communication Disclaimers

I watched with interest and alarm both the Senate Intelligence Committee and the Senate Subcommittee hearings with representatives of the 3 big social media companies,. It is more than clear that unidentified ads and re-postings of such spurious ads sowed discord, division, and disinformation to an unsuspecting American public. I heard the weak responses of Facebook about identifying who paid for these ads, and with what currencies. If the American government is going to surrender to foreign powers our electoral integrity by failing to impose rules requiring transparency on social media platforms, the fault will be with our government itself, for selling-out our democracy in what amounts to treasonous inaction. As things now stand, the FEC is not only allowing assaults on our birthright to vote with confidence based on certifiable information, but actually inviting foreign actors to interfere with and disrupt our elections. "Don't tread on me," remains the clarion call for protecting our nation's sovereignty and the right of citizens to know exactly who wishes us harm by using our free markets against us. If the FEC is not working for the American people, it follows that it is working against us. The time to act is past due. The Founding Fathers are rolling in their graves; the FEC is rolling the American polity. Dire consequences are a certainty if our government fails to act. "Don't let Putin and his allies interfere in American elections again. Require online campaign ads to include disclaimers as to who is paying for them – just like what is done for television and print advertisements. Americans deserve transparent information about who is paying for communication with a goal of influencing their votes."

Do not let Putin, the Russian "Whack-Job" President, and his allies interfere in American Elections - ever again ! You must require on-line campaign ads to include disclaimers, as who is paying for them – the exact same way that is done for television and print advertisements. Americans deserve transparent information about who is paying for communication with a goal of influencing their votes - especially if they are from foreign - non-friendly - nations, such as Russia !

These entities only care about growing their profits while continued control, and could care less about selling out our democracy. Should that continue to occur, they too will reap what they sew, and it won't be pretty. Just look at how Russia and China et al, regulate social media now. And their ownership and ill gained profits at the expense of our democracy, can and will be taken away from them in these authoritarian countries.

It is especially important for our American government and citizens to be alerted to any possible outside foreign influences who may be trying to manipulate our country's elections for their own agenda and control. Please establish common sense protections for our democratic electoral process by incorporating transparent safeguards online. Thank you.

Please change the law to require online campaign ads to include disclaimers for who is buying them, which is the standard currently for television and print advertisements. Americans should not be influenced by ads from foreign countries, and transparent information about who is might be trying to influence them will hopefully help that problem."

We must know the truth about false advertising, and worse social media manipulation. This is a page out of the Putin's regime. Why do the Republicans want to shield themselves from us knowing the truth? Government is in a profound crises, and there is more to come. We must have the same rules that apply to TV and radio ads, it is the communication medium of today.

REG 2011-02 Internet Communication Disclaimers

Don't let Putin and his allies interfere in American elections again. Require online campaign ads to include disclaimers as to who, precisely, is paying for them – just as television and print advertisements must already do. And when the buyer of the ads appears to be some generic or obscure business name that's probably a shell company, dig deeper! Find out who REALLY controls that corporation, i.e., who's REALLY paying for the ads. We Americans deserve transparent information about who, exactly, is paying for communications that aim to influence our votes. Better yet, simply don't allow online political ads. Personally, I put no credence whatsoever in anonymous internet stuff that's difficult to trace or verify. Much of what's online is false information anyway, because it's easy for the people involved to hide, be anonymous, etc. Why add more distortion and lies?

Sincerely,

They should at least know the source of the material so they can determine the biases involved and that what they read is not objective or factual. Rules have not kept up with technology. The amount of money spent by those who want to purchase influence is tremendous. All media bear a responsibility for honest disclosure of funding sources and the biased opinions of those who post articles and messages. Without this information, voters will make terrible decisions that affect our country.

REG 2011-02 Internet Communication Disclaimers

"Don't let Putin and his allies interfere in American elections again. Require online campaign ads to include disclaimers as to who is paying for them – just like what is done for television and print advertisements. Americans deserve transparent information about who is paying for communication with a goal of influencing their votes."

Sincerely,

Berta Zueger Wrangham

"Although Russia's actions in last year's Presidential election make clear that our disclosure rules regarding political ads are woefully inadequate, that is not the story here. The story here is that Americans deserve to know who pays for political ads, period. Online, on television, in print. We, the People, demand that you take aggressive action requiring all campaign ads fully disclose the people, not institutions, who pay for the ads. It really is that simple. Strengthen current disclosure rules. We, the American People, deserve transparent information about who is paying for communication with a goal of influencing our votes."
